1. Are you bothered by your cosmic insignificance?
2. Do you mourn for a place or person you've never known?
3. Do you really think there is somebody for everybody?
4. Do you place any value in gender roles?
5. Do you have to be related to be family?
6. Are your platonic relationships just as valuable as romantic or family ones?
7. Are you in love? Do you want to be?
8. Do you think you can put love into categories (family, platonic, romantic, etc.) or is it just one general sensation?
9. Would you be happy with a life without romance?
10. Are you always going to be a little in love with somebody?
11. Would you change your appearance if you could?
12. Do you have the feeling you've lost something you might have had in another life - whether it be a person, a place, a world, a language, etc.?
13. Do you believe in reincarnation?
14. Would you want to be reincarnated?
15. Do you think you're special, or just another person amongst billions? Can you be both?
16. Do theoretical ethical debates have any value? Is it important

Researchers hope large study spurs more support for LGBTQ scientists

LGBTQ professionals in STEM are 30% more likely to experience workplace harassment compared with their non-LGBTQ peers. They're also more likely to experience other career-related challenges, including social exclusion and professional devaluation and to consider leaving their STEM profession entirely. That's according to a new study that surveyed more than 25,000 U.S.-based STEM workers, roughly 1000 of whom identified as LGBTQ.

Until now, data at this scale and across disciplines didn't exist, so it's a big step forward, says William Agnew, a Ph.D. student who serves on the executive committee of oSTEM, a professional organization that supports LGBTQ people in STEM. "It definitely corroborates what we've seen, that queer people do experience a lot of discrimination and harassment and challenges in the workplace and that there are big disparities," he says. "I just look at the survey and think, 'Let's take a deeper dive into each of these [variables] and start thinking about interventions.'"

Lead author Erin Cech, an assistant professor at the University of Michigan, hopes the new study will put LGBTQ issues front and center, allowing those who are pushing for change to make a stronger case that "there's an issue here and this deserves our attention." At many organizations, she says, there are people who are "interested in and invested in the issue of LGBTQ inequality, but they don't feel like this is something that's taken seriously—in part because there hasn't been data showing that there's a systemic issue."

My parents never learned it because it wasn't taught in school, and even now when it's finally is allowed to be taught in school, it's only in private and expensive one's ,and usually via organization that are heavily linked to a specific family of Aristocrats (I met some personally). The slang for "dumb peasant", "Plouc" is literally a mockery of the name of many of our villages.

And we still got it WAY better than peoples of color who were colonized by France, whether they still are forced to be part of the country (like New Guinea) or got their independence (Algeria, Indochina...).

Too much peoples like to use England & US as scapegoats for colonialism but don't be fooled, those crimes are much more widespread than it seem. France isn't poor on cruelty and colonialism compared to England, far from it.

If you experienced trauma in childhood or had a rough childhood, dude listen to me. Offer yourself play. You were deprived of it.

Keep bubbles in the house, blow bubbles in the yard, blow them in your room, get a coloring book that doesn't have to be an adult one with mandalas, watch cartoons, laugh at stupid things, dress up as a superhero for Halloween, wear a Santa hat on Christmas and big light up snowflake earrings, lay down on the floor, lay down in the grass, eat eggos for dinner sometimes. It's not stupid. You're not childish.

You're giving your inner child what they had taken from them. They deserve it.

I don't want to derail this post because it's an important message, and OP has addressed it to the people who most need to hear it. But... can i just add, for people who don't feel like they can give themselves permission to do this, that you can give yourself these things even if you didn't overtly experience trauma in childhood?

Even if you never thought of your upbringing as painful or malicious, you can and should still give yourself things you missed out on. Take that class! Learn that skill! Eat the foods you like, or branch out into new ones! Jump in piles of leaves and decorate your walls the way you want them.

Give yourself the things you couldnt have as a kid, especially if you didn't really get to have a childhood, but even if you didn't have the childhood you wanted. Go for a bike ride with friends. Go stargazing. Whatever it was that you feel like you missed, it's important to seek those things and remember that play and joy aren't exclusive to childhood.

The sea shanty seems like the strangest possible pick for this year's new, hot music trend, but as a longtime sea-shanty fan (what can I say, I'm the type who read Horatio Hornblower novels in high school), I'm here to tell you that sea shanties make so much sense for this moment, right now. They're songs with simple, blunt rhythms, meant to be easy to learn and easy to sing along with while doing the hard physical work of sailing a large fishing vessel. One person is the song leader, setting the pace and singing the verses, but the engine of the song is in the repeating chorus that everyone sings together over and over again. They are unifying, survivalist songs, designed to transform a huge group of people into one collective body, all working together to keep the ship afloat.

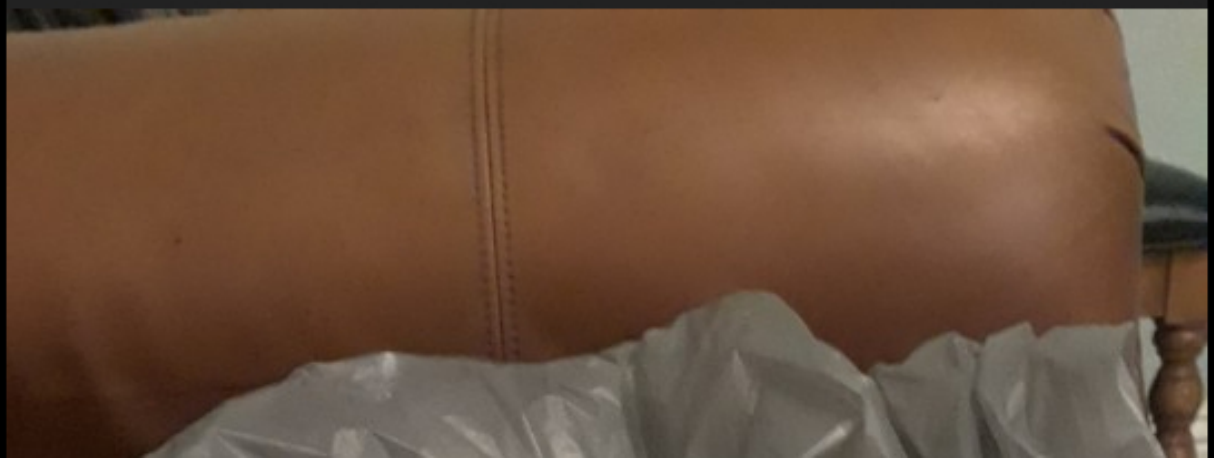
Okay so in LA they've had the reusable bag and thick plastic bag for ten cents going on for years but in Vegas they still give you thin plastic bags at every store but they're these really thin shitty bags that you pretty much can't reuse because they barely survive the trip from the car to the house.

So basically this is how I tell you that I've started making plarn that I'm crocheting into a plarn basket that I will use to hold the plarn balls I make in the future in order to control how many plastic bags are pouring out of our cabinets.



ms-demeanor Follow

How to make plarn:

1. Flatten out a clean plastic bag

2. Cut off the handles and the bottom

3. Cut diagonally into the plastic until the strand is about as thick as you want it to be. (Probably aim for at least an inch thick, it doesn't have to be super even all the way around but you don't want it to get so thin that the strand will break)

4. Cut in a spiral until you run out of bag and then diagonally cut your way out of the final loop.

5. Tie the end of the strand to the end of whatever you were working on or to the last stand you cut.

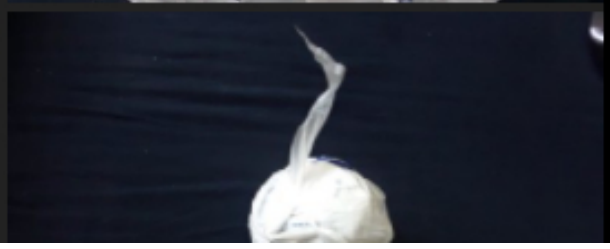
6. Wind or crochet like any other bulky yarn.

The gray disk at the bottom of this post is the bottom of my basket, I'm using an N/10mm hook in a double-crocheted spiral. (I've just started the first layer of elevation)

So far I'm about 10-12 bags in and I've been trimming the tails of the joined bags as I go.



(One bag's worth of plarn goes about halfway around the disk at this point, I think I'm going to do 3-4 more gray bags before I change colors; bags come in 3 general colors around here so this basket is going to be mostly white with gray and brown accents.)

ms-demeanor Follow

Also save the bag scraps, you can use them as stuffing. I'm gonna make a big fucking pincushion with mine. It's gonna be a cube made out of the leftover cat fabric that I don't want to use for masks.

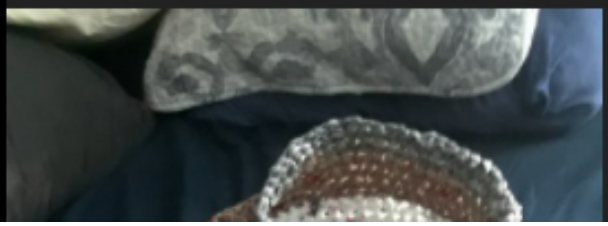
ms-demeanor Follow

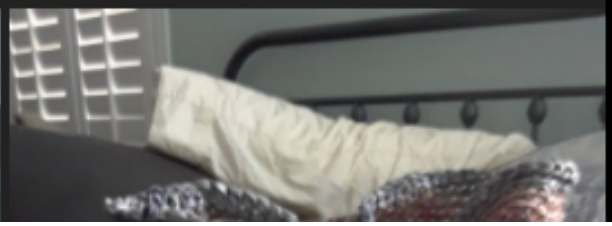
Worked my way through the ball in the first photoset, made some more balls. I'm intrigued by the way the patterns on the white bags show up. I've got some Ross and 99 cent store bags in the next white ball to add some purple and blue-green to the mix.

Making this basket might actually exhaust my current supply of plastic bags, so I've asked my dad to set aside his thicker bags for me in LA so I can compare working both materials.

Kind of get the feeling that I'm going to be a complete gremlin and make a laundry hamper out of the thicker plastic.

ms-demeanor Follow





It's a little ugly, but it's going to do a great job of holding my plarn and associated projects.

pirenja Follow

Oh this is totally apocalypse punk! Makes me want to make my own for use in small grocery runs. Or just to write a scrappy band of fictional survivors using them, haha.

ms-demeanor Follow

NGL, cutting apart a pile of plastic trash and turning it into thread and rolling it into balls and crocheting it into fabric does feel like some variety of cyberpunk Rumplestiltskin shit.

a page of this pop sci book about fungus I'm reading may interest a few of you:

Frank's ideas were fiercely attacked, as Simon Schwendener's dual hypothesis of lichens had been. For Frank's critics, the idea that the symbiosis could be of mutual benefit—a "mutualism"—was a sentimental illusion. If one partner appeared to benefit, they did so at a price. Any symbiosis that appeared to be mutually beneficial was actually one of conflict and parasitism in disguise. Undeterred, Frank worked for ten years to understand plants' relationships with their fungal "nurses." He performed elegant experiments with pine seedlings. Some he grew in sterilized soil; some he grew in soil collected from a nearby pine forest. Those that grew in forest soil formed fungal relationships and developed into larger, healthier saplings than those grown in sterile conditions.

Frank's findings caught the eye of J.R.R. Tolkien, who had a well-known fondness for plants, and trees in particular. Mycorrhizal fungi soon found their way into The Lord of the Rings.

> "For you little gardener and lover of trees," said the elf Galadriel to the hobbit Sam Gamgee, "I have only a small gift...In this box there is earth from my orchard...if you keep it and see your home again at last, then perhaps it may reward you. Though you should find all barren and laid waste, there will be few gardens in Middle-earth that will bloom like your garden, if you sprinkle this earth there."

When he finally returned home to find a devastated Shire:

> Sam Gamgee planted saplings in all the places where specially beautiful or beloved trees had been destroyed, and he put a grain of the precious dust from Galadriel in the soil at the root of each...All through the winter he remained as patient as he could, and tried to restrain himself from going round constantly to see if anything was happening. Spring surpassed his wildest hopes. His trees began to sprout and grow, as if time was in a hurry and wished to make one year do for twenty.

Galadriel is a mycologist!

audible-smiles Follow

The subtleties of mycorrhizal relationships mean that the most obvious intervention—supplementing plants with mycorrhizal fungi and other microbes—can cut two ways. Sometimes, as Sam Gamgee found, introducing plants to a community of soil microbes can support the growth of crops and trees and help restore life to devastated soils. However, the success of this approach depends on the ecological fit. Poorly matched mycorrhizal species might do more harm to plants than good. Worse, introducing opportunistic fungal species to new environments might displace local fungal strains with unknown ecological consequences. It is a fact not always taken charmingly, the author sometimes refers back to this digression without mentioning that Sam Gamgee is a fictional hobbit rather than a real research scientist

On the issue of the ‘q slur’...

So, yesterday, I got into a rather stupid internet argument with someone who was peddling what seemed to me to be a rather insidious narrative about slur-reclamation. Someone in the ensuing notes raised a point which I thought was interesting, and worrying, and probably needed to be addressed in it’s own post. So here we go:

@penrosesun can you like. let people call slurs what they are. just because they tag it appropriately for people who don't want to see it doesn't mean they automatically hate you using it. dont respond with 'queer isnt a slur' to me if u see this just know that people are allowed to be uncomfortable with words that have been used to insult them

The word 'queer' itself seems to be especially touchy for many, so let me begin to address this by way of analogy.

Instead of talking about "queer", let's start by talking about "Jew" - a word which I believe is very similar in its usage in some significant ways.

Now, the word "Jew" has been used as a derogatory term for literally hundreds of years. It is used both as a noun (eg. "That guy ripped me off - what a dirty Jew") and as a verb (eg. "That guy really Jew-ed me"). These usages are deeply, fundamentally, horrifically offensive, and should be used under no circumstances, ever. And yet, I myself have heard both, even as recently as this past year, even in an urban location with plenty of Jews, in a social situation where people should have known better. In short – the word "Jew", as it is used by certain antisemites, is – quite unambiguously – a slur. Not a dead slur, not a former slur – and active, living slur that most Jews will at some point in their life encounter in a context where the term is being used to denigrate them and their religion.

Now here's the thing, though: I'm a Jew. I call myself a Jew. I prefer that all non-Jews call me a Jew – so do most Jews I know. "Jew" is the correct term for someone who is part of the religion of Judaism, the same way that "Muslim" is the correct term for someone who is part of the religion of Islam, and "Christian" is the correct term for someone who is part of the religion of Christianity.

In fact, almost all of the terms that non-Jews use to avoid saying "Jew" (eg. "a member of the Jewish persuasion", "a follower of the Jewish faith", "coming from a Jewish family", "identifying as part of the Jewish religion", etc) are deeply offensive, because these terms imply to us that the speaker sees the term "Jew" (and by extension, what that term stands for) as a dirty word.

"BUT WAIT" – I hear you say – "didn't you just say that Jew is used as a slur?!?"

Yes. Yes, I did. And also, it is fundamentally offensive not to call us that, because it is our name and our identity.

that, because it is our name and our identity.

Let me back up a little bit, and bring you into the world of one of those 2000s PSAs about not using "that's so gay". Think of some word that is your identity – something which you consider to be a fundamental and intrinsic part of yourself. It could be "female" or "male", or "Black" or "white", "tall" or "short", "Atheist" or "Mormon" or "Evangelical" – you name it.

Now imagine that people started using that term as a slur.

"What a female thing to do!" they might say. "That teacher doesn't know anything, he's so female!"

Or maybe, "Yikes, look at that idiot who's driving like an atheist. It's so embarrassing!"

Or perhaps, "Oh gross, that music is so Black, turn it off!"

Now, what would you say if the same groups of people who had been saying those things for years turned around and avoided using those words to describe anything other than an insult?

"Oh, so I see you're a member of the female persuasion!"

"Is he... a follower of the atheist beliefs? Like does he identify as part of the community of atheist-aligned individuals?"

"So, as a Black-ish identified person yourself – excuse me, as a person who comes from a Black-ish family..."

Here's the fundamental problem with treating all words that are used as slurs the same, without any regard for how they are used and how they developed – not all slurs are the same.

No one, and I mean no one (except maybe for a small handful of angsty teens who are deliberately making a point of being edgy) self-identifies as a kike. In contrast, essentially all Jews self-identify as Jews. And when non-Jews get weird about that identity on the grounds that "Jew is used as a slur", despite the fact that it is the name that the Jewish community as a whole resoundingly identifies with, what they are basically saying is that they think that the slur usage is more important than the Jewish community self-identification usage. They are saying, in essence, "we think that your name should be a slur."

Now, at the top I said that the word "Jew" and the word "queer" had some significant similarities in terms of their usage, and I think that's pretty apparent if you look at what people in those communities are saying about those terms. When American Jews were being actively threatened by neo-Nazis in the 70s, the slogan of choice was "For every Jew a .22!". When the American Queer community was marching in the 90s in protest of systemic anti-queer violence, the slogan of choice was "We're here, we're queer, get used to it!" Clearly, these are terms that are used by the communities themselves, in reference to themselves. Clearly, these terms are more than simply slurs.

But while there are useful similarities between how the terms "Jew" and "Queer" are used by bigots and by their own communities, I'd also like to point out that there is pretty substantial and important difference:

Unlike for "queer", there is no organized group of Jewish antisemites who are using the catchphrase "Jew is a slur!" in order to selectively silence and disenfranchise Jews who are part of minority groups within Judaism.

This is the real rub with the term queer – no one was campaigning about it being a slur until less than a decade ago. No one was saying that you needed to warn for the word queer when queer people were establishing the academic discipline of queer studies. No one was 'think of the children"-ing the umbrella term when queer activists were literally marching for their lives. Go back to even 2010 and the term "q slur" would have been basically unparseable – if I saw someone tag something "q slur", like most queer people I would have wracked my brains trying to figure out what slur even started with q, and if I learned that it was supposed to be "queer", my default assumption would be that the post was made by a well-meaning but extremely clueless straight person.

I literally remember this shift – and I remember who started it

I literally remember this shift – and I remember who started it. Exclusionists didn't like the fact that queer was an umbrella term. Terfs (or radfems as they like to be called now) didn't like that queer history included trans history; biphobes and aphobes didn't like that the queer community was also a community to bisexuals and asexuals. And so what could they possibly say, to drive people away from the term that was protecting the sorts of queer people that they wanted to exclude?

Well, naturally, they turned to "queer is a slur."

And here's the thing – queer is a slur, just like Jew is a slur, and no one is denying that. And that fact makes "queer is a slur so don't use it" a very convincing argument on the surface: 1) queer is still often used as a slur, and 2) you shouldn't ever use slurs without carefully tagging and warning people about them (and better yet, you should never use them at all), and so therefore 3) you need to tag for "the q slur" and you need to warn people not to call the community "the queer community" or it's members "queer people" or its study "queer studies" – because it's a slur!

But the crucial step that's missing here is exactly the same one above, for the word "Jew" – and that step is that not all slurs are the same. When a term is both used as a slur and used as a self-identity term, then favoring the slur meaning instead of the identity meaning is picking the side of the slur-users over the disadvantaged group!

If you say or tag "q slur" you are sending the message, whether you realize it or not, that people who use "queer" as a slur are more right about its meaning than those who use it as their identity. Tagging for "queer" is one thing. People can filter for "queer" if it triggers them, just like people can filter for anything else. Not everyone has to personally use the term queer, or like the term queer. But there is no circumstance where the term "q slur" does not indicate that you think queer is more of a slur than of an accurate description of a community.

If I, as a Jew, ever came across a post where someone had warned for innocent, positive, non-antisemitic content relating to Judaism with the tag "J slur", I would be incensed. So would any Jew. The act of tagging a post “J slur” is in and of itself antisemitic and offensive.

Queer people are allowed to feel the same about “q slur”. It is not a neutral warning term – it is an attack on our identity.

Any word can be used as a slur- I mean really, the term “queer” was around before “gay” was

I dreamt up an existentially horrifying episode of spongebob last night

omegaverse Follow

It basically started off with spongebob guilty deciding to find sandy who he'd left abandoned in a strange wormhole dimension to save himself. he and patrick find a way to recreate the 'wormhole' (portal) to the same isolated dimension and go in. the dimension is essentially a very small windowless room lit by a single dim lightbulb. the gravity in the room is similar to that of the moon. the portal closes. sandy looks at the two and doesn't say anything. she's sitting and she looks beyond tired and horrifically depressed. spongebob and patrick sit next to her and say nothing.

at this point the credits are rolling and i ask my brother if he knew why they didn't go home at the end of the ep. he said that the portal was only one way and that they had no way of going back. i thought 'ah so they're trapped in that windowless room for all of eternity' and then said out loud "that was honorable of spongebob. at least sandy isn't alone anymore" LOOOOL then i woke up like what in the fuck was that real and there was a puddle of drool on my sheets. Then i went back to sleep and had a school dream I can't remember

Sources tell Deadline that Chris Evans is cleaning the dust off his Captain America attire as he expected reprise the role in the MCU in some form. Still vague if deal as completely closed but insiders say its headed in that direction for Evans to return as Steve Rogers aka Captain America in at least one Marvel property with the door open for a second film. Sources add it's unlikely to be a new Captain America installment and more likely to be like what Robert Downey Jr. did after Iron Man 3, appearing in films like Captain America: Civil War and Spider-Man: Homecoming films like Captain America: Civil War and Spider-Man: Homecoming.

Evans had been very public that he would be hanging up the shield after Avengers: Endgame with Marvel going as far as having the character hand the shield to Anthony Mackie's character at the end of the film in a passing of the torch type of moment. Things had changed in recent months as the idea was floated of Evans returning to the MCU as Rogers to see if there was any interest and as the weeks went by, Evans became more game to the idea with the two sides coming to agreement at the top of the year.

How he may return is still unclear and being worked out but the options are unlimited. Over the years, even after a character's film franchises have come to an end, Marvel has found way to insert them into the MCU in other properties and with the addition of new Disney Plus limited series even adds more properties where he could make his return if its not his own film. Whatever that path may be, fans are sure to be invigorated knowing they would be seeing the return of a character that they assumed wouldn't be back anytime soon.

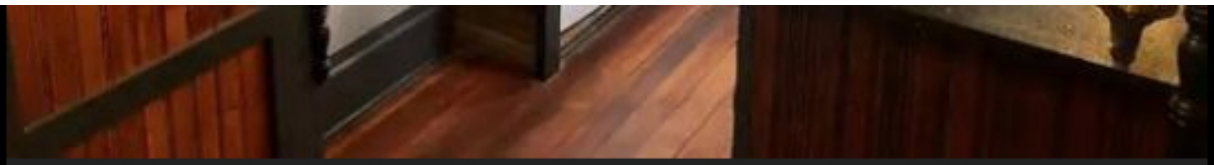
Calling the Goths! I have posted tiny houses and cottages, but never one like this. It's a little gothic mini mansion.

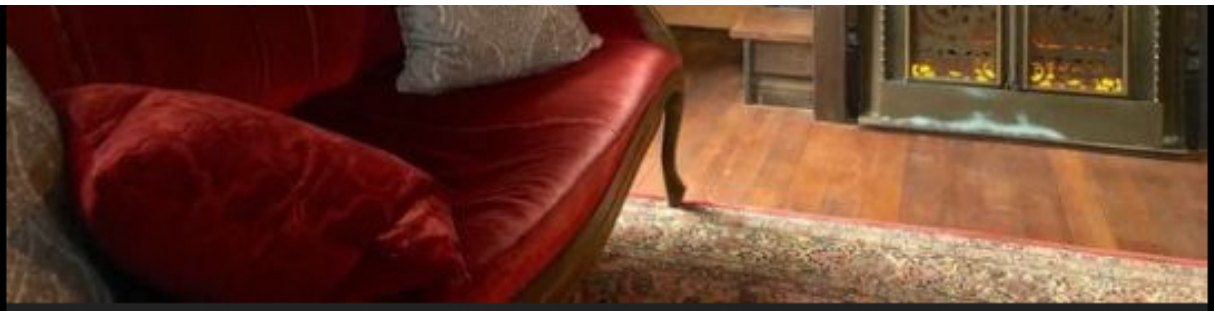
The Gothic Victorian Mini Mansion is hand built with reclaimed and vintage materials, a Mansard roof, a tower and Emmet the gargoyle guard to keep watch!

The Great Room of the Gothic Victorian is a blend of plush, regal and cozy. Relax and play the piano, sip a glass of wine or a cup of tea.



The kitchen is large enough to entertain, and has dishes and glassware for 8.

The kitchen has reclaimed quartz counters, a full-sized fridge and sink.



The antique sofa and chairs are red velvet and quite sumptuous!

The antique, brass fireplace glows with flickering, remote controlled candles, and the custom sliding door leads to the full bath.

Take a bath in the cast iron, claw-foot tub!

A copper sink and quartz counter.

The “tower” adds a large entryway, with hooks for garments, and a round, stained glass window.

The Gothic Victorian living room from the loft.

There is room in the loft for storage.

The bedroom loft is over 6 feet tall!

The custom stairs are behind the fireplace doors, under a carved, brass chandelier.

The alternating stairs make an easy access to the loft bedroom.

Drapes can be opened to enclose the entire loft, creating a private, Gothic cocoon!

The candles in their candelabras create just the right mood!

The Gothic Victorian takes architectural cues from the late 1800s and has to be one of the best recycled tiny houses I've seen.

truly the thing that has most improved my mental wellbeing since my slow motion mental breakdown sophomore year was not actually improving my time management skills and getting more organized or any of those things that ive been bad at my entire life but instead just not glowing with incandescent self loathing and inadequacy because of it. like i still do a ton of shit at the last minute and forget to open important emails and my bedroom is a mess but im sooo much happier because at least i am not constantly stewing in overwhelming guilt because of it.

a lot of adhd hacks and stuff are centered on how to be more productive and organized and how to like cheat your brain into conforming to neurotypical expectations and like! that is useful and we do live in a society so we have to find ways to navigate that and all.

but what really cut down my mental anguish that my adhd was causing by like 80% was going from spending several hours berating myself until i did my task at the last minute, and then spending several hours berating myself afterwards for doing it at the last minute to instead just doing it at the last minute and not punishing myself for it.

sure the common wisdom is not to do things at the last minute but frankly the amount of psychic bullying i have to do to myself to do things any other way isnt worth it.

marithlizard Follow

This. Self-acceptance is hard when the ADHD traits you have are unacceptable to other people ("why don't you just" "how can you live like" "I can't stand to see the way you"). But you can take a step back and ask yourself: is this an actual functional problem where the thing doesn't get done adequately? Or are you mostly managing to do the thing okay, but other people are aesthetically offended by your style and process even though they acknowledge the end result is acceptable?

It turns there are a lot of places in life where you can metaphorically say, "If you don't like the way I drive, please feel free to get out and walk" to both your inner critics and the outside ones that put those voices in your head.

My dear lgbt+ kids,

If you cried yourself to sleep last night, I am so proud of you.

Sounds like a weird thing to say, doesn't it? We say "I am proud of you" when people accomplish something, maybe when they did a happy thing, too.

Crying yourself to sleep is as far away from happy as I can imagine. It's heartbreaking. It feels like the dark and the quiet just make every worry in your heart a million times heavier. It feels so lonely and pathetic and hopeless.

And that's exactly why I am proud of you. You are reading this. Yes, maybe you read it with tired eyes and a headache. But you made it through that horrible night. You made it through the dark and the quiet, the sun came up again.

That will happen the next time, too. Crying at night feels soul-crushing. But it won't crush you. And I am so so proud of you for that.

With all my love,

Your Tumblr Dad

Jake Tapper
@jaketapper

Neal Kirby, the son of Captain America co-creator Jack

Kirby, was distressed to see some of the January 6 terrorists/rioters wearing shirts with versions of his dad's creation corrupted by the image of the outgoing president. His message to them:

Statement to Insurrectionists:

My father, Jack Kirby, along with his partner Joe Simon, created Captain America in 1941. Perhaps the most iconic symbol of patriotism since the "Spirit of 1776", Captain America has stood as a symbol and protector of our democracy and the rule of law for the past 79 years. He was created by two Jewish guys from New York who hated Nazis and hated bullies. Captain America stood up for the underdog, and, as the story was written, even before he gained his strength and prowess from Army scientists, always stood for what was righteous, and never backed down.

While watching one of the horrific videos of the storming of the Capitol, I thought I noticed someone in a Trump/Capt. America t-shirt! I was appalled and mortified. I believe I even caught a quick glance of someone with a Captain America shield. A quick Google search turned up Trump as Captain America on T-shirts, posters, even a flag! These images are disgusting and disgraceful. Captain America is the absolute antithesis of Donald Trump. Where Captain America is selfless, Trump is self-serving. Where Captain America fights for our country and democracy, Trump fights for personal power and autocracy. Where Captain America stands with the common man, Trump stands with the powerful and privileged. Where Captain America is courageous, Trump is a coward. Captain America and Trump couldn't be more different.

My father, Jack Kirby, and Joe Simon, the creators of Captain America and WWII veterans, would be absolutely sickened by these images. These images are an insult to both their memories.

If Donald Trump had the qualities and character of Captain America, the White House would be a shining symbol of truth and integrity, not a festering cesspool of lies and hypocrisy.

Several of our presidents held the same values as Captain America. Donald Trump is not one of them.

Neal Kirby, Jack Kirby's son

bob's burgers hc - minecraft

-the kids all play minecraft together

-tina would try and tame EVERY horse she comes across, naming each one as well

-louise would have an army of dogs

-gene would be incredible at building, but would always get lost and have to be teleported back

-they tried to teach bob and linda how to play, linda liked to follow the animals resulting in her being stung by bees a lot

-bob would think it's dumb because he doens't understand it

-louise made the restaurant/house in minecraft only to burn it down in front of bob

-tina refuses to eat meat because she feels bad for the animals

-louise will intentionally kill animals in front of tina (secretly she doesn't eat the meat though because she feels bad too, she just gives it to her army of dogs)

-gene has one dog and one cat, he keeps them inside his house at all times because he's afraid of losing them or them dying

-tina lives in either a dirt home or a barn she made for her horses, she just doesn't care about a nice house for herself but would never let her horses live in an ugly barn

-gene's character is just a replica of himself

-louise's character looks like a demon, but still has her hat on it

-tina had the basic Steve skin until louise got annoyed by this and made her one that looks like a horse

-tina and gene have only been to the nether once, and it's because louise forced them to, louise has a whole other house in the nether

-speaking of, louise tricked them to place beds down in the nether, which killed both of them

-the kids play as much as they're allowed to, bob had to put a kimit on it because they would skip work to play, they're only allowed to play after work, tina respects this but sometimes louise and gene will sneak away to play when it's slow (so almost everyday)

-they showed their friends at school and now at lunch they all get

-they showed their friends at school and now at lunch they all get together to play and have made a pretty impressive world

-louise likes to torture the villagers and steal their things until I met you.

I'm not necessarily scared of being rejected by you or even scared of the possibility that you more than likely don't feel the same. I mean, I get it. You've got your standards and, well, I'm me.
But the truth is, I'm afraid that you do reciprocate the same feelings. And what if it's just all in my head that you'd never take a risk for me. I guess I have this idea in my head of you that you wouldn't care to try.
But maybe I am scared to love or be loved. Or maybe I'm scared of the act of falling in love. Or maybe I'm just terrified of trying so hard and giving my all to someone who won't stay, who isn't my forever.
I'm just so tired of wasting
I'm human too and believe it or not, I've got a heart underneath all this skin and I've got a soul that's been ~~seen~~ too many dark places. I guess, when guys find out too much about me, they run in the opposite direction because they think it's too much baggage.
But, to be honest, I'm growing old and too impatient to be playing these cat and mouse games. I am not going to settle for less and I am not going to lower my standards just to raise your worth.
Love me for who I fucking am and nothing less. I'll meet you halfway, but you best believe I expect you to take the extra step.

At one point years ago I was at a bar with my schoolmates, and my roommate's boyfriend's friend - who was quite drunk - decided to amuse himself by asking me "tricky" questions. However, it became quite clear very soon that he was simply not knowledgeable enough about LGBT matters to know that most of his questions had quite clear, simple and straightforward answers.

He asked me hey what if, like, a straight man had a sex change, but is still attracted to women? Is it possible to be transgender and gay at the same time. At this point I had said nothing of my own dating history or future plans, and decided that I would not, either.

But I said yes, actually. It's not only possible, it's actually quite common. Many trans people are bi or gay, and will date other gay or bi people. And I can't find a reaction image that'd appropriately match the face he made, but he was quiet for some time after that, apparently trying to process this information.

And I mean I was drunk as well, but I'm pretty sure that in a moment there, for a fraction of a second, this big-ass hairy beer-drunk finnish metal dude contemplated the possibilities of quitting blacksmithing to become a full-time lesbian.

"And that quote, "The only disability in life is a bad attitude," the reason that that's bullshit is because it's just not true." - Stella Young [IDs: Screenshots from the late, great, Stella Young's TED Talk: I'm Not Your Inspiration, Thank You Very Much. Stella is a wheelchair-user sitting up on the stage in front of a massive crowd. In these screenshots, she's saying, "No amount of smiling at a flight of stairs has ever made it turn into a ramp. Never. (Laughter. Applause.) Smiling at a television screen isn't going to make closed captions appear for people. No amount of standing in the middle of a bookshop and radiating a positive attitude is going to turn all those books into braille.]

I use this speech and the underlying theories a lot in my PhD, but Stella Young honestly had one of those voices that needs to be heard by everyone, so I figured I'd post my favorite part of the speech here. If anyone remembers that time I threw myself onto the floor For The Vine, you'll know that I also hate the quote: "The only disability in life is a bad attitude". Stella just conveyed the message with less pain.

You know, I want to see someone explain this in 20 years to music history scholars.

Not because it's a stupid thing or a dumb thing—I think it's wonderful and lovely that it exists—but because it's so RANDOM. "In 2021, this one song specifically gained a following such that people across the globe, who had never met, began to sing it and harmonize together, and other people then stitched their videos together to make entire choruses." "Okay, but why?" "…..because it was the cool thing to do." "Okay, but why did it become cool?"

Answer that. ANSWER THAT. Why did it become cool? There is zero reason a 200-year-old sea shanty should be a meme, much less a meme people are taking SERIOUSLY. (Listen to these folks. There's not a parody in the bunch.)

Like. Just. "We made this giant beautiful thing BECAUSE." Because why? Because. That's why. Just because.

I want to see that explained to students and scholars of history who insist there must be a reason for everything. Yes, yes, there was a viral video, but that's just the catalyst. Why Wellerman? Why not the latest Megan Thee Stallion? Or perhaps more to the point, HOW Wellerman, ALONGSIDE the latest Megan Thee Stallion? What is it that made so many people latch on to this song? WHY?

I do. I want to be a fly on the wall for this. We have, functionally, modern recordings of what this would have genuinely sounded like on a ship, because of this meme. That's amazing. But what's the why? And how do you explain "because"?

This is totally random and I can't fully express what I'm trying to say but: "it's okay to not want to do kinky stuff in the bedroom" is an important message, but it's missing something and I'm not sure what

I mean, for one thing, it's okay not to want to do anything in the bedroom, and we DO talk about consent, but there's still this...assumption that a certain set of acts are the Basic Package that constitutes Normal sex, and that all the "weird" stuff is in steps up from there or something, and that being an allosexual individual means you get the Basic Package.

So we don't often tell people that it's okay not to want to do oral or to have penetrative sex. In particular, no one encourages people to evaluate whether it's okay to "expect" that of their partners in the same way they do with "kinky" stuff.

So like, I keep seeing people criticizing the fact that "kinky" stuff is becoming Expected and Normal, but as an autistic person whose sensory experiences are very different from what's "expected," it's like...nothing in particular should be Expected and Normal? "They might not be into that/enjoy that" is just as true of the most "basic, vanilla" sexual acts you can think of as the most out-there weird crap you can think of? There's no single specific act that every single sexually active person should be presumed to enjoy?

as someone who's not autistic but nevertheless has a lot of psychosomatic stuff going on as a result of trauma, i can 100% relate to all of this and concur

aparrotandaqrow Follow

THIS. And it's not just in the context of people with sensory and touch stuff for whom this is important; it's important in general. Everyone has their likes and dislikes in the bedroom, and everyone is entitled to their preferences. The key to phenomenal sex is NOT amazing endurance, kinky moves, huge dongs, imaginative positions, etc--it's to pay attention to your partner, communicate with them about both of your needs and preferences, and ensure that you are BOTH thinking about the other's pleasure, and how best to be their partner. There is no correct set of moves and turn-ons that everyone starts with as the starter package; there is only what works and what doesn't work for each individual.

Related to this post: the whole concept of linguistic / onomastic proximity is so interesting. It's the idea that an original phoneme in a name can be supplanted by a cognate from a neighboring language, thus giving the name a different meaning even as its spelling and pronunciation remain the same (or nearly the same).

A good example of this is the name Rosalind. It was originally a Germanic name derived from the roots hros ("horse") and lind ("tender, flexible"). As German and Latin speakers began to interact more and more, the spelling was altered by proximity to the Latin rosa ("rose"). Coincidentally, linda means "beautiful" in many Romance languages. So the same name could mean "flexible horse" to one family and "beautiful rose" to another one 10 miles away.

Another good example: Beatrix. Its original form, Viatrix, is the feminine of the Latin Viator, meaning "traveler, voyager". Its spelling was altered by proximity to another Latin word: beatus, meaning "happy, blessed". It's so interesting to see how names have always been formed by corruptions and colloquialisms.

Not to be that millennial, but as a librarian I’d just like to say that the greatest thing you can do to support your local library is to understand how they are funded and to support their funding with your vote.

Libraries can do a lot all on their own but quite often they cannot legally “toot their own horn” so-to-speak when it comes to advocating for sustaining or increasing funding, getting levies or bond issues passed, etc. Libraries need you to love them not just with your checkouts and attendance at programs.

The libraries in my city host 'English as a Secondary Language' classes, cooking classes, classes on how to use that 3D printer, local history classes, responsible naturalistic gardening classes, beekeeping classes, and all sorts of other fun topics. Plus the plethora of clubs that use the library conference rooms as their meeting place.

All for free.

Support and visit your local library. Ask about their services and classes. VOTE TO KEEP THEM FUNDED

millennial-librarian

While we're on the topic of libraries, please be sure to support library workers. We're more than just the people who get you your books, and there is a lot of research coming out about low morale amongst librarians, requires a great deal of emotional labor, and report high rates of mental illness. Also, as is the case with customer facing jobs, we experience a LOT of verbal harassment from patrons, and high rates of sexual harassment. It's also worth checking out the #protectlibraryworkers tag on Twitter to see how many library workers are being put at very high risk during the Covid-19 pandemic.

Supporting libraries needs to include supporting library workers. Libraries without library workers are warehouses for books.

I very recently found out my fiancé is rich rich

/r/all

As the title suggests I just found out that my fiancé is wealthy and I mean ridiculously so. He proposed to me and then a few days ago he started talking about prenups and I laughed at that saying "broke people don't have prenups" and he was like "who said I was broke?"

Which then led to him explaining to me that he was "comfortable".

The problem isn't that he comes from money,has money it's that I am angry that I never knew and that he could've helped us pay for our dog's surgery by paying for it but no I had to sell the only thing of worth I had in my life in order to finance our dogs medical bills.

I have literally been providing for us because he's an aspiring writer and I wanted to help him in his dreams. I pay all the bills and provide for us both.

I don't get why he hid it?! Like I get him not telling someone they're wealthy after the first couple dates/months but you'd think after the 4 years we've been together and supporting him that I would've known!

I'm just trying to make sure that I am not angry for selfish or materialistic reasons. I grew up poor and I am now part of the working poor so my view on money and wealth might be skewed.

I feel like he used me this whole time and that I had to work crazy hours and work a second job occasionally to support us when he could've so easily taken care of us both or even just paid his share.

Edit: for those asking he has full access to his inheritance, he's always had access to it.

He did a lot of talking cause my jaw was on the floor when he told me how much his grandparents left him. I can honestly say that I had to sit down for a minute because I couldn't wrap my mind around the amount.

When I finally decided to lift my jaw from the floor I asked him why he lied and let me work so hard when he could've so easily stepped in and he was all like " yeah well money is what tore my family apart and people never like me for me when they know I have money" he also went in on how he decided to stop using his family money before meeting me because he wanted to know he could do things on his own. Which I reminded him that he didn't do anything on his "own" for over 3 and half years because I carried his load of the household bills. When I asked him why he didn't step in when I was selling my mothers violin for a dog he brought into our lives(I love daisy, she's a wonderful dog but it was his dog before she was ours). His answer "well I didn't think you would really sell it and before I knew you did"

This all led to a shouting match and I asked him to leave my apartment.

ThrowRA_-9 5 2020-09-05 05:53:27

I thought that I was supporting the person I love to reach for their dreams even if it meant I had to lift him up for awhile. I didn't mind and did it happily. He clearly didn't feel the same because what kind of person stands on another when they can stand next to them?

I never once begrudged him for chasing his dream, in fact I was proud and willing to help him reach it. I worked and got extra jobs to pay our bills and to have stability for both of us. I did all of that because I thought he was worth my labour, my time,my effort and I believed he'd do the same for me if he could. Well he could and he didn't.

He was so worried of me potentially using him that he used me during our whole relationship. That to me is beyond cruel. I sometimes worked multiple jobs just so I could afford a great weekend out with him or could buy a present for him/us or have extra money as cushioning. Instead of reciprocation, he showed me that he wouldn't piss on me if I was on fire. His excuse for letting me break my back for nearly 4yrs " you know I hate money and you are so good at budgeting and managing money I just left all of that to you. You know like how I cook more often then you" and "didn't I pay fully for our holiday 2 years ago?". The more I heard his dumb ass excuses the more I got angry.

He would rather do his poverty-larping act then help me pay our bills. And while I was playing russian roulette with which bill I should pay this month he was keeping tabs of every cent he ever spent during our relationship which didn't even amount to much.

I am many good things and many bad ones but never have I been a person who wouldn't help or care for her loved ones or even the occasional stranger.

I can honestly excuse stupidity but blatant disregard and disrespect is not something I forgive or forget. Can you imagine not giving a person the equivalent of a singular dollar or you know what let's say 10 dollars so they could keep their late mothers violin and save the life of their dog?! I am angry and I told him so. He apologised and continues to apologise. I am not willing to forgive but I am playing nice. One of the many bad things I am combined with the good things is that I am vengeful,petty, got a great and long memory and I am extremely patient.

He has returned my mothers violin to me and paid off my student debt as a way of apology. I have also hired a great lawyer to assist me through the prenup, who also had me ring evaluated and turns out the ring he gave me was real.

Thank you to all the strangers who dm'd me horrible things and called me a gold digger who was after his money.

You sure helped fan the rage to be the gold digging bitch now. I plan on bleeding him dry!

Apple and Briar headcanon stuff, I'm a sucker for friends to lovers UwU offwiththeirbuds answered:

Sure anon!

- Apple and Briar have been friends since, well, since they were babies tbh

- They're mothers both insisted they be friends because well a princess must have princess friends right?
- Briar fell in love with Apple during Middle school. She was so embarrassed about it she didn't tell anyone.
- Eventually her mother found out and was so supportive!! Briar was so relieved her mother supported her she cried
- Briar told Apple how she felt a few days after she threw the Story Book of Legends into Wonderland. Apple didn't react too kindly
- She avoided Briar for a while until Raven knocked some sense into her.
- Apple apologized to Briar and Briar reluctantly accepted. Having your heart broken well. . .it isn't too fun y'know?
- After they graduate from Ever After and Apple deals with her own personal problems she realizes the mistake she made and tries to fully fix her relationship with Briar
- During this time she realizes 'oh no she's hot'

My NT friend: doesn't this silence bother u

Me, autistic: are u telling me u can't hear this incredibly loud fridge

autisticeducator Follow

The lights have sound

Electronics have sound

Appliances have sound

If electricity runs through it, it has sound.

Rarely is there actual silence (and that does bother me due to lack of sensory input).

This is why the barn uses me when they think the horses are reacting to a noise they can't hear. I'll likely find it (it's usually the heating or the electrical box in the indoor).

I also know when the electric fences are on.

wetwareproblem Follow

For years I was convinced that I was either hallucinating or had hearing damage, because electronics always made this high-pitched whine that was closer to being felt than heard, and nobody else knew what I was talking about.

Then I met other autistic people.

sapphic-pink-kryptonite

Wait a minute.

...Are...are you telling me other people can't hear the fridge motor?

The constant high pitched whine of electric appliances?

That the world doesn't sound like radio frequencies?

It already took me 21 years to realise that I don't perceive light the way normal people do (thanks to astigmatism) and now this?

What else?

What y'all think 'gifted child' discourse is saying: I used to be special and now I'm not and that makes me sad.

What 'gifted child' discourse is ACTUALLY saying: The way many educational systems treat children who've been identified as 'gifted' is actively harmful in that it a. obliges kids to give up socialising with their same-age peers in favour of constantly courting the approval of adult 'mentors' who mostly don't give a shit about them, b. demands that they tie their entire identity to a set of standards that's not merely unsustainable, but intentionally so, because its unstated purpose is to weed out the 'unworthy' rather than to provide useful goals for self-improvement, and c. denies them opportunities to learn useful life skills in favour of training them up in an excruciatingly narrow academic skill-set that's basically useless outside of an institutional career path that the vast majority of them will never be allowed to pursue.

also: the way "gifted" children are taught largely just rewards them for already knowing things or having a specific skill come easily to them, and thus not only gives them severe anxiety about asking for help or not knowing something right away for fear of disappointing those adult mentors, but also actively discourages them from learning HOW to learn things and pick up new skills, thus sabotaging any life they might try to pursue outside of that institutional career.

myautisticpov Follow

Plus, not only is it possible to be "twice exceptional" - aka "gifted" and have a disability that can make learning more difficult - if you're “gifted”, people usually don’t notice you have a disability.

So you spend your life split between being academically smart and then also unable to do basic, day-to-day functions and being told that you’re “too smart to struggle with this”.

Like, I do believe that neurotypical “gifted” kids are also fucked up by the system, but the majority of people who I personally know who complained about the system turned out to be neurodivergent in some way but didn’t know when they originally started in “gifted child” discourse.

And I’m going to take a stab and say that the people hit the hardest by this are probably women with ADHD, as their presentation usually looks like their life falling apart at/post-uni.

So you can spend your entire life being told you’re definitely going to succeed - and usually you’re pushed to specific career/life goals - and then overnight, your life falls apart and you can’t figure out why.

Someone posted a “Can you write romance even if you hate read it” question in and erotic authors subbreddit, and Gods Alive, save me from the assholes who picked up a romance novel from the dollar bin once and now consider themselves experts. I wouldn’t have stepped into it if I thought it was going to be more of that, but dammit, you’re erotica writers, you're supposed to do the goddamn research!

Even worse is the woman saying, "That's why I write m/m! I just can't empathize with female characters ever!!! So I just basically write m/f and switch the genders of the female and its so much better!!!"

HOLY INTERNALIZED MISOGYNY, BATMAN.

thebibliosphere Follow

When I was working that particular field you could always tell which authors were there because they loved romance and passion and writing, and the ones who thought they were too good for the genre but hey, it's easy money right? And it's totally only a matter of time until their other, more legit work picks up, just as soon as someone realizes their genius...so in the mean time lets do something easy yea. Because that's totally how that works.

Except it's not.

While the former authors would go on to have a loyal fan base and be a joy— let me tell you— *an absolute joy to work with, the latter would invariably be the ones that flatlined in terms of sales, and then blamed it on editing.
We had after all, removed the "best parts" of their story. The really steamy, totally sexy, nitty gritty...completely unacceptable and horrifying rape scenes which they thought passed for "power play" and "domination", while those of us given the task of vetting the work sighed and retched into our keyboards, and politely emailed them the house terms of publication again, as well as the gentle reminder that in no way would we ever print something that could be misconstrued as non-con or harmful. We were a safe space house. I'm glad to say they still are.

It was a major problem in the m/m side of erotica too (which fun fact, were predominantly written by women for women according to our sales team), and to my knowledge those kind of issues never arose from male authors writing for that sub genre, usually because they were on the LGBTA spectrum and knew what a healthy m/m relationship was supposed to look like. This isn't to say that women can't write good m/m erotica that can be enjoyed by actual gay men, I'm just saying your average m/m story written by women like the above isn't even going to pass the salt let alone the muster (—d, badumch. I'm sorry I'll show myself out.) as anything other than objectifying fantasy for the straight gaze.

You could also tell the writers, which sadly more often that not, were other women, who had some serious internal misogyny to work out. Presumably with a crow bar.

They were the ones who tended to write the stories about having affairs with married men and painted the wives as ugly nagging shrews and the men as poor put upon blessed souls in need of sexual rescue by the beautiful, totally cool, not a bitch at all "hero" who invariably always moved on in the end because she was too good for anyone. Sometimes the other women weren't even married to the Male of Interest, they were just other women in the background, and all of them were inferior and subhuman to the MC. And god forbid you pointed out that the MC was a bit...shall we say...unlikable as a result, because then you were sullying the genius of their work. After all, you weren't the creator, you were just there to fix the formatting or something, and besides, it's Only Romance, it's not like anyone takes this shit seriously.

At which point we'd forward the correspondence to the chief and I'm told by the girls who worked directly outside her office, you could hear the high pitch cackle from behind the closed door, and then the story would vanish from your virtual work station and so would the author, never to be heard from again. After all, why should we waste precious time and resources on making your work fit for public enjoyment, if you're going to come into our house and shit on the rug and act like you've just done as a favor. Why? Why would we do that when there are authors out there who love what they do. Authors who want to tell good stories and spend hours describing the beauty of human interaction through witty repertoire, subtle innuendo and some frankly amazing fucking.

There is nothing inferior about romance as a genre. And it really fucking pisses me off when people pick up a book that is meant to be enjoyed lightly on some sunny or rainy afternoon and holds it up next to something else like Game of Thrones and says "well this one has dark and depressing elements in it, just like real life, so it must be inferior to this" and completely miss the point that Romance, is a type of Fantasy too. The happy hopeful kind that human beings want to be told, that out there somewhere problems are trivial, love is real, and men know where the clitoris is and don't mash it like a quick time event.

Stop Shitting on Romance. Jesus Christ, how hard is it not to be a dick about something.

jabberwockypie Follow

People deserve to make enough to live on. That's not up for debate. This idea that some jobs aren't "supposed to" pay enough for people to get their needs met is bullshit. Nobody should be living in poverty.

the-space-ferret Follow

Yes, but it's McDonald's. It's not meant to be a job to support a family, it's mainly for support for teens or side jobs.

aeliad Follow

No, it's not.

There is no such thing as a job "for teens" (and even if there was, they deserve a fair wage for their labor, too.) Nobody should get paid so little that they need "side jobs."

If your business model relies on paying people a wage that keeps them trapped in poverty, your business should not continue to exist. McDonald's can afford to pay their workers a better wage, they're choosing not to.

acestuckwithahimbo Follow

Funny story- I am a manager at a Mc Donald's. Do you know? We have a set limit of minors- teenagers- we can employ. It's barely over a dozen. Most locations open at 6am... guess what, on week days minors cannot work before they are out of school, or before 730am if they are out of school (GED and the like) also 730am on weekends. Minors cannot work after 10pm on weekdays, and after Midnight on weekends. My location closes at 11pm Sunday to Thursday, and 1am on Friday and Saturday. Because of labor laws here, they may not have more than 20 hours a week, and cannot work more than 5 hours in a single day.

So no. This is absolutely not a job just for teens. We have a giant compactor that crushes and crushes our trash. If you're not 18 you're not allowed to operate it. Anything sharp? Are you 18? Can't touch it. Being a manger? Are you out of high school and at least 18? Forget it.

And honestly, I wouldn't make any of the kids at my job deal with our customers when they're going feral. Do you know how bat shit y'all are?? I had a woman start crying because we ran out of the Mc Rib and caused a scene in my drive-thru for 10 minutes. I've had old men cussing me out because Corp decided to bump a senior coffee from .99 to 1.09. Though if you sit inside, which they all do for well over two hours every morning... refills are free.

We have a lady here who we call "Princess Diamond" because she's so fucking entitled she gave us a bad review on the McVoice because we served a homeless man and he sat to close to her... which was across the entire goddamn lobby. Would you really want a teen trying to deal with this woman??

I sure as shit don't. I don't allow her to deal with most of my Crew, actually. I'm as nice as freaking sugar in your tea to her face but if she gets rude I start slamming her order down on the tray. And as my Crew knows, the sweeter my voice gets the more trouble your in. She doesn't stay long on days were I start getting aggressive with her food.

Side tracked- but no. We have so many things that need to be done all day long that we can't legally let a minor do. A sister location was just fined over $5,000.00 because of labor violations pertaining to minors.

Just pay us so we can live. Please. A lot of these teens are trying to move out and get into apartments. But if an apartment costs 800.00 in rent and that's usually one of the two checks a month an adult gets. Maybe. That's a struggle even for myself, and it's just my roommate, our dumb cat, and me. No children. He has a worse paying job.

We just want to be able to live.

aeliad Follow

This goes for any minimum wage job.

The minimum wage, when it was set in 1938 as the United States was coming out of the Depression, was intended to be the minimum you needed to *be able to pay your bills and raise a family on a single income. Not this bullshit we have today. It's as low as it is because it hasn't kept up with inflation.

Like, not only is working in fast food one of the hardest fucking jobs because it's hot, it's dangerous, and it's full of the worst customers, but it's also disrespected constantly, and people don't think you deserve to be able to pay your bills.

Fuck that.

Pay workers enough to live on with a single full time job.

Now I'm thinking of a Human!AU where the Them are Aziraphale's foster kids.

Warlock is the child of Crowley's American cousins who passed away when Warlock was a few days old, landing a panicking Crowley with a newborn.

He calls Crowley Nanny due to mispronouncing the name Anthony as a toddler. Crowley just rolled with it, so Warlock never stopped.

Gabriel is probably Aziraphale's jerk older brother who keeps pressuring him to go on a dates so he can meet a woman & 'have kids of your own'.

Aziraphale's tone is always absolutely glacial as he repeatedly replies 'I already do.'

Warlock, who is visiting the Them and Aziraphale along with Crowley sticks his leg out to trip Gabriel as he leaves and Gabe faceplants right in front of the Them.

Crowley gives him a thumbs up.

For anyone who isn't on Tiktok, I wanted to share a story.

1 week ago, a Tiktok user with Parkinsons posted a video expressing anger over how tiny the pills for treating Parkinsons are because it makes them really difficult to pick up when someone has something like, you know, Parkinson's.

4 days ago a guy who directs country music videos for a living, and was previously most famous on Tiktok for knowing obscure facts about Snappple, taught himself how to use Fusion 360 (a design and modeling tool) so he could design a pill bottle that solves the problem.

Problem was though that he didn't own a 3D printer so he posted a video of his design and offered to share schematics with anyone who wanted to test it and or improve upon it. All schematics are open source.

3 days ago, dozens of engineers and 3D printer enthusiasts had begun working on the project and started refining and tweaking to get tolerances where they needed to be and ensuring that it actually met the needs of those it was being designed for.

13 hours ago, there is a working prototype, it has "less plastic than your average McDonald's toy, and should be priced as such". The original designer has gotten a patent attorney to ensure it remains open source and the patent itself will be donated to the Michael J. Fox Foundation.

In the mean time, for anytime who needs one now and doesn't want to wait until the manufacturing in scale begins, they can get one at cost from the engineers printing them at home.

(Edit: I have put a link to the link tree for Brian Alldridge, the guy who first designed the bottle, in the comments. The first 2 entries are links to info on the bottle.)

I feel like all you Americans need to take a look at what happened here in the UK after Maggie Thatcher died. Because when it comes to tasteless celebrations fuelled by anger and the death of a hated political leader, we REALLY pushed the boat out. We had street parties. We had burning effigies. We pushed "Ding Dong the Witch is Dead" to the top of the charts out of sheer hatred. Bone up kiddos, and I really hope you manage to do that truly American thing, of dramatically outdoing us with your celebrations.

For all the bible-thumpers out there:

Proverbs 11:10

"When the righteous prosper, the city rejoices; when the wicked perish, there are shouts of joy."

So yes, I WILL be shouting with joy.

randomslasher Follow

This is like. Really basic psychology stuff but I think it's important to understand people process things differently. Some people may not want to rejoice because it makes them feel bad inside to celebrate something like someone's death, and that's valid. But for those of us who do want to celebrate, that's valid too. The amount of pain and division and death caused by Trump, his policies, his ideals and his words cannot be overstated. Thousands of people are dead because of his incompetence and malice. Hundreds of thousands more are suffering and will continue to suffer because of the hatred he encouraged and the violence he incited. To tell us that we are evil for celebrating his demise when it happens is to deny us the catharsis we have desperately needed. If you wish to refrain from celebration, that is a valid choice you can make, but it is inappropriate to sit in judgment of the choices of others. We did not all suffer equally, so trying to gatekeep the way we process and manage our anger, grief, and healing is pretty shitty.

In case anyone was worried, though: Wanting to celebrate the death of someone who caused pain and suffering to you, your loved ones, or just to humanity in general does NOT make you evil. You're not bad for feeling relief, joy, or pleasure in the death of someone who caused that level of suffering. You are just a person who needs to process trauma after the passing of a dangerous abuser, and there are lots of ways to do that. As long as you are not physically harming others, then do what you gotta do.

So I work at a library and about a month ago I helped a little old woman who is legally blind figure out how to listen to our audiobooks on her tablet. We got to chatting and I mentioned that I always listen to audiobooks while I knit, which made her very excited and she told me all about the afghans she used to make when she could still see. She was so sweet and I was so glad to be able to help her figure out a way to still enjoy books without being able to read.

Yesterday I answered the phone at work and when I said my name the woman on the other line got so excited and said “Madeline?? You’re exactly who I wanted to talk to! This is Marie Brandon, you helped me about a month ago. How late are you working today?” It was her!! And about an hour later she and her husband showed up, and she was carrying a huge stack of old knitting patterns for me, and her husband brought in a few boxes full of yarn. They couldn’t stay long but I was so touched that she remembered me, and I struggled to not just flat out start crying when she handed me the patterns. When I looked through them later I realized it was her entire personal collection from over the years, including all her personal notes and drawings and even some photographs of her finished pieces. No one in my family knits, and to have someone pass on their legacy to me like that was incredibly moving.

This isn’t what I usually post here, but with life being especially dark lately I wanted to share a moment of happiness and a reminder that a bit of kindness goes a long way ♡

I did not, however, know how to make bead lizards, nor did I have an intimate friendship with any girls who did. Year after year I secretly hoped that someone would make me a bead lizard. No one ever did.

Now that I am grown, I still do not have any bead lizards. I could make my own, and do so easily, but it's not the same. The child inside me still yearns for the symbolic intimacy of being given a bead lizard. If any of my friends know how to make bead lizards—or are willing to learn—and are comfortable taking our relationship to Bead Lizard Level, I would be happy to return the gesture with a small needlefelt creature of some kind. “beauty and the beast” where beauty’s dad comes home with the rose and is like oh shit oh shit this terrible monster says i have to come live with him forever because i picked his favorite flower and beauty just goes fuck that and puts on her pants and marches down to the beast’s castle herself and she’s expecting this horrifying dark fortress but it’s actually sort of just a normal castle with big rose bushes and furniture that’s sometimes alive and she thinks, i can work with this and the beast comes out and he’s like don’t look at me i am a hideous monster and beauty’s like dude you’re like a talking tiger in a cape are you kidding you’re AWESOME can i pet you can i stroke your paws can you give me a ride and he’s like what and she goes around the castle like okay we’ll put curtains here and expand the kitchen and this could be a really cute breakfast nook and the beast is confused because isn’t she supposed to be terrified and hate him and he had all these intimidating speeches planned and he’s like uh aren’t you going to try to run away and beauty’s all are you kidding this is a magic castle i’m going to live

here forever

so they just sort of settle in together and one day beauty goes home for the weekend to visit her family and they're all amazed that she's alive and her sisters go WHY DIDN'T THE HUGE MONSTER EAT YOU TO DEATH and she's like nahhh he's basically just a big cat he's kind of cute actually sometimes he plays with yarn when he thinks i'm not looking and she explains how it's really not that bad, all the dishes wash themselves and i get all these gorgeous dresses for free because the castle doesn't know what else to do with them and yeah there are flowers everywhere but hey that's his hobby y'know i'm not gonna discourage that man and then one day while beauty's re-alphabetizing her magic library and trying to decide where to put that enchanted mirror the beast comes up and he's like hey so this is awkward but are you like.....in love with me.....?????????

and beauty's like oh uh wow haha um sorry no you're...sort of a tiger and the beast is like thank goodness because if you were i'd have to turn back into a human and i've kind of gotten used to being a big lion thing with horns and the ability to speak english for some reason like why would i want to go back to being a spindly little man and then beauty laughs and she's like okay well can you go catch us a wild boar for dinner, dear and they end up getting married in the end just because it's easier to explain that way, you know, a single lady ~~living alone with a man~~ even if he's not actually a man, and that's fine with them because beauty was never really into the whole boys and sex thing and the beast (whose name is jeff) is honestly more interested in his flowers and whenever any of the other ladies in the village give her any shit beauty is just like, oh, you don't like my crepes? well you know my husband, who is literally a tiger, loves them and then everyone leaves her alone, which is really all she ever wanted and she goes back to her magic castle and sits down with a book in front of the fire and rests her feet on her cat husband and nobody bothers her ever again

can that happen

Leaf and branch, water and stone: they have the hue and beauty of all these things under the twilight of Lorien that we love; for we put the thought of all that we love into all that we make."

- Fellowship of the Ring, Chapter 8: Farewell to Lorien

This is how I think of Jackson's movies. Yes, there are serious flaws - Gandalf's de-powering, Gimli as comic relief, and Faramir, namely - but come on.

Remember when the guys making their chain mail invented a new method for quickly producing large amounts of it by hand? Remember Miranda Otto walking down the street, practicing sword positions? The guys who forged all of the swords - for leads and for extras? The men and women riders who volunteered to be riders of Rohan? The costume designers who designed the inside of Theoden's armor (which no one would ever see) so beautifully that Bernard Hill said he felt like a king? The friendships between the cast, and their size doubles, and the stuntmen?

When they made that movie, they put all that they loved into all that they made.

Just in case you hear of anyone claiming that this week's insurrection wasn't an insurrection, that they were patriots, not traitors.

Those are zip tie handcuffs.

They intended to kidnap members of congress.

They broke into the Senate chamber, where the 2nd in line to the presidency could have been. This traitor is on the balcony of the Senate. And likely causing damage because he's an incompetent idiot who doesn't know how to hop over a barrier any other way.

They also attempted to break into the House chamber, where the 3rd in line to the presidency could have been, and House members were sheltering in place. This is where the traitor got shot when trying to enter through a window into the chamber.

This is not patriotism. It's sedition. It's attempted kidnapping. It's terrorism. They were planning on committing multiple felonies, some of which could have easily led to their execution under the death penalty when they got caught.

They need to be rounded up. They need to face consequences for their actions. Nobody forced them to commit sedition. Nobody forced them to attempt kidnapping. Nobody forced them to commit terrorism. They did it all on their own.

They should be proud to turn themselves over to police. Otherwise why have they kept waving all those blue line flags?

biggest-gaudiest-patronuses

actual real things about this fic:

- the Grinch is nonbinary & uses they/them pronouns
- the Grinch is autistic
- it takes place in the Jim Carrey movie universe, so the Grinch has two lesbian moms
- (side note, in the movie it was implied the grinch was conceived at a swinger's holiday party, but we don't have to talk about that)
- tony was a professional athlete who had a lucrative career appearing on cereal boxes
- tony the tiger is divorced w/ kids
- the Grinch is in therapy

Okay so I have grandparents that are like, Greek Christians which makes them very, very, conservative. Like every time I go over to their house with my parents I have to pretend I'm straight, (they know I'm a lesbian they just want me to pretend I'm not when I'm in their house) I can't wear anything above my knee because it makes me look like a "slut" and I have to be super polite and not talk about anything controversial or anything.

So I was at their house last week with my parents and they were having a go at my mum because she isn't talking to my aunt, and just being really horrible. Anyway they asked me what I was reading on my phone, and I don't remember what I was doing, but I said I was reading a fanfic, which is a novel written online by writers-in-training, and would you like me to read it to you? And they said, oh sure, dear, so I read them the whole first chapter of the grinch x tony fic, and when they I was finished I looked up at them both and they were just staring at me like I was crazy. It was the best.

and they said to my mum "what is god's name was are you letting your daughter read?!" And my mum said,

"oh, I don't know, but the more you tell her not to get mixed up with things the more she'll want to do it. Maybe you should calm down a bit."

So they just awkwardly offered us some lunch and I pretended like everything was fine, and we went back to their house yesterday and they were actually a lot more opened and understanding and it's all because of your freaking crack fic. Your freaking grinch x tony tiger fic has made my grandparents more accepting and open.

For example if a wanted to make a cartoon character realistic and use a real person for reference or to edit the photo to look like them?

I've been just googling white 20s male, black female 40s etc. (can't find any good references for kids either) and been sifting through the results.

Thor nudged Loki. "Go on," he said. "Make her laugh. This is all your fault anyway."

Loki sighed. "Really?"

Thor nodded, and he tapped the handle of his hammer meaningfully.

Loki shook his head. Then he went outside, to pens where the animals were kept, and he came back into the wedding feast leading a large, extremely irritated billy goat. Loki irritated the goat even more by tying a strong rope tightly around its beard.

Then Loki tied the other end of the rope around his own private parts.

He tugged on the rope with his hand. The goat screamed, feeling its beard tugged painfully, and it jerked back. The rope pulled hard on Loki's private parts. Loki

Reminder that norse pagans and norse paganism are anti-fascist and anti-racism. it's a culture of acceptance; nazis aren't welcome here.

It makes my heart ache and my blood boil to see our symbols being, once again, misused and mocked by. Please, do not mistake our believes with white supremacy.

We have a hard time already fighting misconceptions about out culture, beliefs and gods; it seems like there is always someone who wants to make it even harder for the pagan community to fight the appropriation of our symbols. The mjolnir, valknut, the yggdrasil, the runes, nor any norse and celtic symbols are "nazi symbols". I've come as far as reading that the valknut is a pedo symbol. What the fuck.

People are afraid of embracing their ancestors, their culture or their chosen faith out of fair of being labeled as a nazi. We need to stand stronger than ever today. Don't let them ridiculize us anymore.

Please, I need your help!!

My big brother was hospitalized for a tumor in his brain. We are still waiting for the MRI so the doctors can know how to proceed, but we do not have the financial means for the treatment. Any help is well received, here is my ko-fi https://ko-fi.com/nubeinvernal

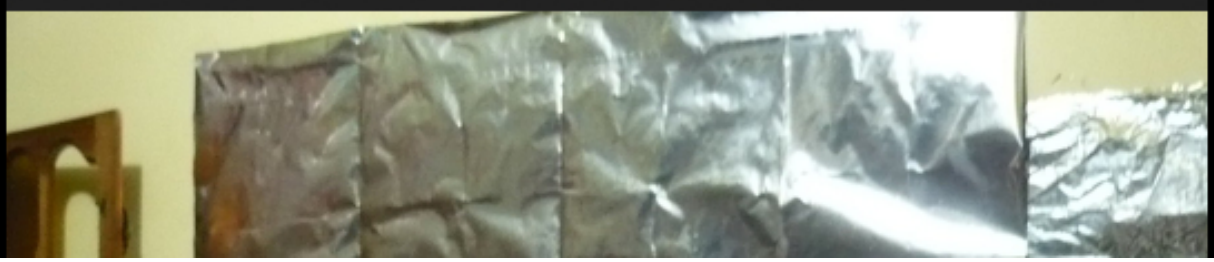
and my paypal: Nubeinvernal@gmail.com

My second brother has always been restless, hungry, and full of energy. When he was young he began to study theoretical physics and won a scholarship to finish his studies in Brazil. He was doing well, the first time he came back to visit us he was big and smiling.



This year due to the pandemic, he began to live locked up and alone, from August he began to have mild headaches and his eyes hurt a little. He thought it was because of the glasses and he didn't really complain much. His money was no longer enough for food, so we sent him some remittances. One afternoon he called us saying that he was returning to Lima, Perú for the holidays and the problem became apparent when on December 11th he arrived skinny, haggard, quiet and walking strangely.

We thought it was because of the stress of the trip, since he had to reschedule it twice and asked for a loan for it. The first week he seemed to be him again, he talked, he went out a couple of times, but little by little he stayed more at home. His head ached, he lost his balance, and his vision blurred from time to time. We took him to the doctor and he told us he had vertigo, he sent him a 5-day treatment, but it got worse. On the 29th he fell to the ground, and on the 31st he fell and began to vomit, so my mother and I took him to the hospital as an emergency, because of the covid they only let one companion in with the patient so my mother stayed with him. After 15 hours of tests, already hospitalized, they give us the diagnosis that he has a brain tumor. This tumor is behind, pressing on the motor and eye area. They have put medicine in the serum to deflate it and have sedated him because he wants to get up to go to the bathroom. He is lucid, he knows who he is, and he recognizes us, truth be told, when he started at the state university, the social worker helped him get health insurance from the state because we are people without resources, however, this is basic insurance, which covers only a part of the entire treatment. The MRI has yet to be done and only in that and on the tests, almost all of our savings will go away; we do not have the resources for an eventual operation and that is why we need any help you can give us.

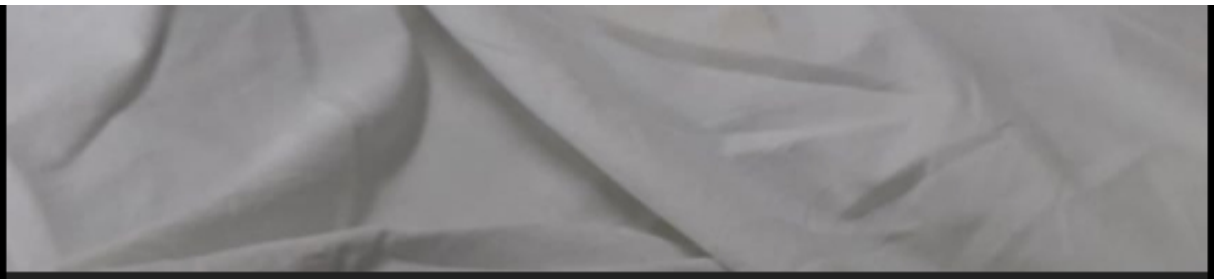
I'm begging you, any help will be useful to help my brother, please.



nubeinvernal Follow

My big brother was changed from the emerency room to the observation room. He is sedated because he wants to get up and walk. The MRI is finally processed for tomorrow.

nubeinvernal Follow

My big brother is in an ambulance on his way to have the MRI done at a hospital that has the machine for it. He is totally lucid and a little nervous.

nubeinvernal Follow

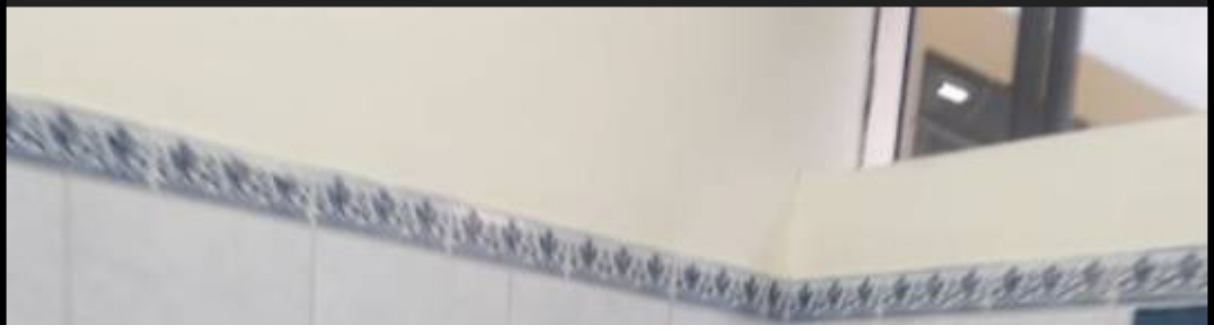
My big brother came back from the MRI to his hospital bed, he says he is bored as hell and wants to eat again, medicines seem to be working :D The results are coming on tuesday.

nubeinvernal Follow

Doctors called, they confirmed that my brother will be operated on, they want the results of the MRI today so that they can continue with the plan that had already been drawing up. They still haven't tell us much, but I want to believe that everything will work out.

nubeinvernal Follow

My older brother was moved from the observation room to the hospitalization room. The doctors have ordered us to do a special tomography to see if the tumor has compromised an artery or vertebra, I hope that with that they can tell us what we need about his operation and treatment.



nubeinvernal Follow

The results arrived, the tumor is a little big and is in an area full of blood. Doctors will decide on Tuesday whether to operate or do a biopsy.

It's going to be a long wait.

No wonder the wizard world in Harry Potter feels so stagnated, really. They don't learn about geography or math or the history of the world. Everyone muggle born person's education beyond magic stopped at age 11.

What education does the wizard born have before 11? Are there magic elementary schools where they at least learn to read or something?

gryffindorssource

OP I literally think about this all the time. Where the hell do wizard born wizards go to school before 11? Do their parents homeschool them? Do they have wizard tutors? How does that work?

Anonymous asked:

Hey there! I hope you're doing well today and always. 💜 Do you have any tips 4 writing a romance between characters with a slight age difference without making it weird and gross to readers? 😅

creativepromptsforwriting answered:

Hi :)

How to write age difference

Don't ignore the difference

- especially fantasy stories can fall into this trap
- even if a 100 year old vampire looks like a teenager he is still not one
- there is so much life experience there that it will change their behaviour and it will be massively different from that of an inexperienced teenager different from that of an inexperienced teenager

- but on the other hand, be careful to not let the older person always be condescending to the younger partner
- they may be younger and less experienced in some aspects, but they are not incapable of acting on their own

It's not just about sex

- inexperience does not have to be about sexuality even though it's a big part the younger they are
- age difference can also play a part when it's about financial capability, confidence in themselves and life experience in general
- be careful that the older person in your story does not manipulate their younger partner - which can even be unintentional

Underage relationships

- relationships where one or both partners are underage can be tricky to write, because they can easily be seen as problematic in general
- even relationships between two teens that still have a couple years between them fall into that
- if you want to write a healthy relationship try to think about what that age difference means regarding their experience and mental capacity
- children are not capable to handle adult relationships and shouldn't be put into one
- what is underage and what is legal depends on the law where your story takes place, so I will not go into any specific ages
- but keep in mind that the legal age of consent is a construct and does not necessarily mean someone is suddenly a grown-up at midnight

Adult relationships

- everyone has their own perception on what a small and what a big age difference is
- together with the local legal age this can also depend on the cultural opinion
- but in general, you can say that five years when the partners are 35 and 40 or older don't make that much of a difference and probably don't have to be explicitly addressed if they didn't start dating as teenagers or just like to tease each other about what music came out when they first started hitting the dancefloor
- bigger age differences can lead to different life experiences, different times they grew up in, different cultural ideologies that used to be the norm for them, different expectations for their relationship, being at different points in their lives
- and even if they are adults, a relationship with a 20-something year old and someone a lot older should always be carefully written to not fall into problematic territory
- always keep in mind that love can definitely happen between people of any age, but if the difference is too big, there might be not a lot of other things in common

For your question specifically, I would say that a slight age difference is not that dramatic and probably very normal, as long as both partners are consenting adults. Just make sure that they are indeed partners in their relationship and that there is mutual respect and both partners bring something to the table and it's not too much of a dependency happening.

Show the younger partner as being perfectly capable of making their own decisions.

Explore their differences and let them learn together about the right way to communicate with each other to avoid letting the differences become a problem in their relationship.

I hope this is helpful!

Today, January 6, 2021, We Patriots by the millions, have arrived in Washington, D.C., carrying banners of support for the greatest President the world has ever known.

Bit if We must...

Many of Us will return on January 19, 2021.

carrying Our weapons, in support of Our nation's resolve, towhich the world will never forget!!!

We will come in numbers that no standing army or police agency can match. However, the police are NOT Our enemy, unless they choose to be!

All who will not stand with the American Patriots... or who cannot stand with Us.. then, that would be a good time for YOU to take a few vacation days.

But for all the Level 1 Trans Fighters out there please know with acceptance, mindfulness, and self compassion I did in fact find my balance. Not a fast process. Basically a complete lifestyle change.

Sometimes I lose that balance, sure. But when I choose to present my authentic identity? I'm objectively drop dead gorgeous.

Peace be with you.

No shit sherlock, I don't care that a building got broken into or politicians were threatened. For a just cause that would've been awesome. The capitol protest was wrong because their cause was wrong. Because they were idiot nationalist trolls who fell for a conspiracy theory and intended to fuck over fellow citizens by upending a legitimate election. Civilian uprising otherwise gave us many of the rights we enjoy and is therefore pretty cool when the motivation behind it is altruistic.

So recently, I've been noticing a lot more people starting to call Disney out on their bullshit, which is really awesome because Goddamn have they just gotten worse and worse as time goes on, but there's one things I've started to notice about these posts that I think warrants a really important addition that needs to be made to all future callouts.

You see in a lot of these cases the consensus is "Fuck Disney" and while that's very true, in reality your kinda being extremely broad here, as the company is broken up into at least 8 different studios, split into different divisions like ones for the theme parks and resorts, one for the cruise line etc, and has hundreds of thousands of employees under its belt. A lot of times when companies like Amazon and Tesla are called out, people are also making sure to specifically calling out their CEOs and founders, in this case Bezos and Musk, and making it very clear that they are also very much so in the wrong here, rightfully so placing the responsibility onto them.

But I rarely ever see this happen with Disney, and I thinks it's important we start to change that a bit. Right now Disney as a whole is being helmed by two men, Bob Iger and Bob Chapek, as even though Chapek has officially been named the CEO and Iger was on his way out, he decided to step back into the role for a bit due to the pandemic, so he's still very much at fault for a lot of this as well. You might know Iger as the man responsible for buying up, well, pretty might know Iger as the man responsible for buying up, well, pretty much every hot ticket property Disney has right now including Pixar, Star Wars, and Marvel and as well as plenty of other shady deals. He's even made it clear that's he looking to take up a Presidential bid sometime in the next few years which is just Absolutely Yikes. Chapek on the other hand, is so notorious that even die-hard Disney fans more often then not will say they despise him, mainly due to his massive budget cuts in the theme parks that have not only dulled down the overall experience, but more importantly have resulted in thousands of cast members, even before the pandemic, being laid off because he didn't see them as being "necessary". His most common nickname is Lex Luther for a reason. And what's worst, while they both agreed to cutting off their salaries completely at the start of the pandemic, they've since gone back to being paid-in full, and they're still laying off massive amounts of their workers while their parks are being reopened, which I can tell you from personal experience is exactly what Chapek wanted all along.

There's plenty more about these two guys that I could talk about, but the point here is it's time to put faces and names to a lot of the shit the company has being trying to get away with over the years, and I wanna keep this post relatively short. So, just please remember, make sure whenever you say "Fuck Disney" that you also make sure to say "Fuck Bob Iger" and "Fuck Bob Chapek". Make their names just as known as Bezos and Musk for all the wrong reasons, and maybe we can stop another fucking millionaire from having one of the highest seats in the US government.

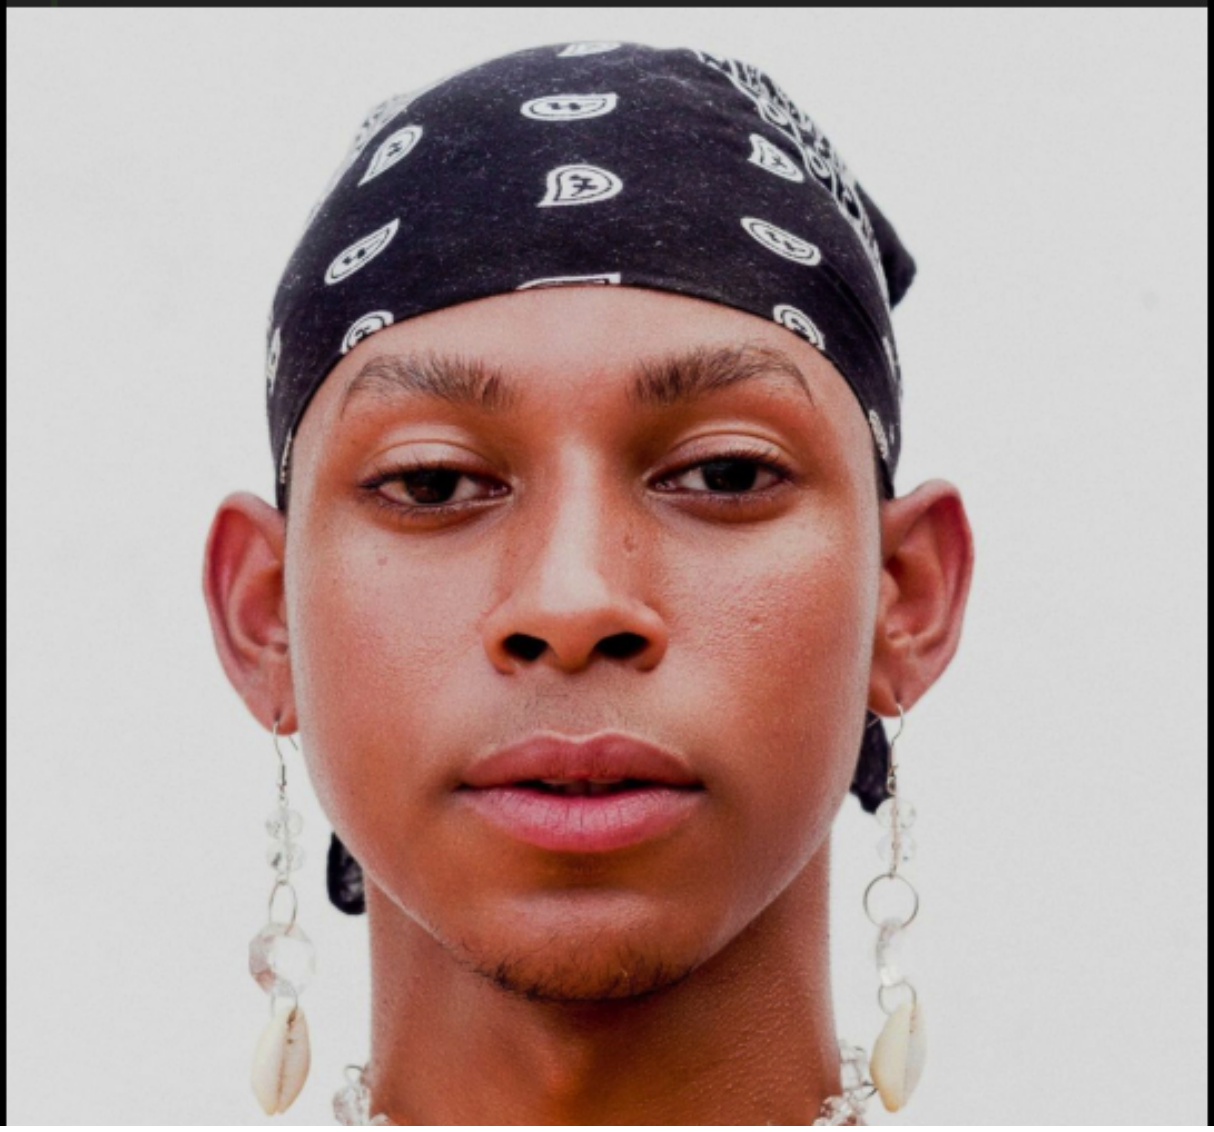
Rodrigo writes:

> In this series, I celebrate my community's identities in all their glory, and how they thrive despite oppression.



To aint-bad Rodrigo Oliveira said:

> I think the idea for the project came up to me following the election of Brazil's current president, Jair Bolsonaro.
> It was clear from the very beginning that his political agenda had zero interest in addressing the needs of minorities in the country, especially LGBTQIA+ members, the black community, and the working class.

I can't stand... book culture. One time someone got me a canvas bag that was like "Books + Tea = Perfect Day" and I drove to goodwill with that shit so fast

hatingongodot Follow

Most books suck. Most books are goddamn awful or utterly extraneous. Don't get me wrong, I think we're deeply lucky to live in a world where most books can vanish without us losing anything culturally or intellectually, rather than a world where books are so scarce that a single person might own like twelve in a lifetime. But still. Books are easy to aestheticize as Magical Portals of Adventure and Whimsy if you only read maybe two genres

girlintheglassboxx Follow

AH! Words for that whole... situation.

I work at a public library and book culture there is nauseating. Not really among the other employees (though we've had a few come through over the years), but the patrons?

Oh god the patrons. Most of the people who check out books are just regular people who like reading. I even have patrons who L O V E to read, and who spend a majority of their free time reading or discussing books, they're part of multiple book clubs, they always bring a big bag and leave with it full. They aren't the Book Culture People.

Book Culture People loudly announce that they're so surprised that there are children who know what books are!

They act affronted when I mention our ebook service, and scoff at the idea that anyone could enjoy reading from a screen instead of off the page!

They are personally offended that publishers hire actors to read the books for audio versions, because they feel that "audio books cheapen the experience of reading" and "audio books are cheating"!

They have to proclaim their fetish for 'real' books, whether through tacky tote bags, weird quote filled pinterest boards and social media posts, or awkwardly shoehorning unimpressive humblebrags about all the classics that they're reading into unrelated conversations with tired library assistants.

They're terrible, and I resent them because I fear being grouped with them by the nature of my field.

hatingongodot Follow

I was literally just talking about a friend whose classmate in her library science program was bragging because she didn't use any digital resources for her final paper because she "respected books too much." It's such a bizarre attitude for anyone, much less an aspiring librarian, to have

I've also been approached by people while I read in public who are like "Oh my GOSH it's so GOOD to see other people who READ nowadays!! Honestly I just have NO hope for our generation" and it's like, first of all if you're a reader you should know the last thing anyone wants is to be interrupted by a stranger for unnecessary conversation, and second please shut up holy crap

girlintheglassboxx Follow

Oh god, I've heard that one before.

Hating accessible books and shunning technology is basically the antithesis of modern librarianship.

I don't get the ebook hate, ebooks are literally just books. You cite ebooks the same way, and depending on the format, you don't even say they're ebooks.

It's a performative, self important approach to something that I genuinely enjoy, and I think it bothers me more than, say, fandom antics, just because it's so much more common. People get offended when I tell them I don't read a lot in my down time, that I genuinely prefer audio books, that I'll skip their recommendations because I don't share their tastes.

It's so... boring.

bard-powers-activate Follow

What's really annoying to me about those types of people is a book and a cup of tea DOES sound like a perfect day but when they slap it on an aesthetic canvas bag in one of Those Fonts it becomes a weird performative thing instead of an honest sentiment.

Like, one of my favorite memories is the first time I re-read my favorite novel and picked up on a lot of new things I didn't catch the first time. I was on a cruise with my parents and completely enamored with the whole "everything is paid for already so you can eat/drink as much as you want" thing and I spent the one full day at sea reading, drinking jasmine tea, and eating little strawberry shortcakes from the galley. It inspired a tradition of re-reading my favorite book every summer to see how my thoughts/perspectives had shifted (and because the plot is just really fun).

That book means a lot to me, and I take immense pleasure in reading it and other books while drinking tea because oftentimes they pair nicely together. But elitism? No. No no no no no.

People ruin things when they take something pleasing and lock it away behind arbitrary rules.

The Lokasenna is a poem in the Poetic Edda. It depicts the exchange of several insults between Loki and the Æsir. It takes place during a banquet held for th gods by Ægir and Rán. Many references to mythological events mention in the Lokasenna (particularly those mentioned by Loki) are elsewhere unattested. This may be due to the nature of the poem, in which Loki hurls insults upon the gods, probably with little or no foundation.

Njörðr:

"It is no great wonder,
if silk-clad dames
get themselves husbands, lovers;
but 'tis a wonder that a wretched man,
that has borne children[5],
should herein enter."

Loki:

"Cease now, Njörðr!
in bounds contain thyself;
I will no longer keep it secret:
it was with thy sister
thou hadst such a son hardly worse than thyself."

(Týr defends Freyr) Týr:

No wonder everyone was glad when Loki's lips were stitched shut by the dwarves.

I really think we should separate love from romantic attraction.

Can romantic attraction become love? Probably, yes! But it isn't love in itself. It can lead to it, or be born from it (like demiromantics, I think).

But saying romantic attraction is already love undermines love, and reduces it to a fleeting sentiment.

Maybe that's just the way I see love though - something you build and put energy into. To me, love contains memories and time. Romantic attraction doesn't inherently have that.

The glaze on the inside and outside of the Jug has developed cracks which when the Water is added causes the darker red clay under the white glaze to absorb the water. This in turn makes the Jug "Sweat" or "Bleed". But it also compromises the integrity of the Jug as the Clay inside is becoming soggy as it absorbs the water. It's also a breeding ground for Bacteria and Mold as the Clay can't properly dry inside the glaze.

So it's either going to fall apart and shatter into a bizillion little pieces.

We must remember the library of Baghdad and Cordoba

markwateneymemorialcrater Follow

Remember. The library of Alexandria always made copies of all thier texts and sent them out to other libraries. So we didn't actually lose that much with the sacking of the library of Alexandria because copies existed elsewhere. The library of Baghdad was thrown into to river when Ghengis Khan invaded. As far as I'm aware, most works stored there were unique. Carthage also had a significant library that was obliterated along with the rest of the city by the romans. We know very little about the Carthage culture as a result.

The post with the free PDF of Stone Butch Blues is circulating again, and I've failed to see anyone mention this, so: Yes, Leslie Feinberg is an LGBT+ icon and hir novel is an indispensable piece of history that has helped so many lesbians and transmascs understand the cultural context of their identities. I am not arguing against that. However, it contains at least seven or eight, more if I recall correctly, rape scenes and references to rape and sexual assault within the first like 100 pages alone, so if you're someone who's sensitive to that, this may not be a piece of media you can safely engage with.

The copy of Stone Butch Blues given to me by an elder ten or so years ago had all of the sexual assault scenes highlighted so that anyone reading it could either choose to skip it or at least have warning, so maybe we could do something like that for a PDF?

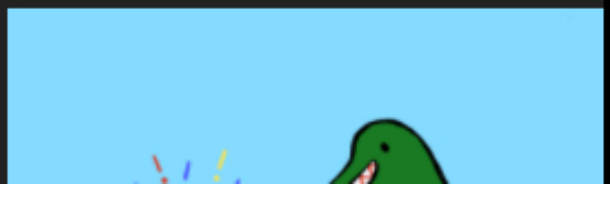
An educational pride zine based on the series by Lucy Cousins

Today Maisy's friend Charley has come for a visit! Hello, Charley!

Now what have you got there, Charley?

Ah! It's a flag! Charley is very excited to show it to Maisy.

Maisy wants to know what Charley's flag means!



On the last day of pride month, I thought I'd share the little fake Maisy book I made when I started thinking about how much comfort thinking of Maisy as non-binary brings me! In a perfect world I think there really could be books that taught young kids about gay and trans people- I mean, it's clearly possible. Maybe someday!

poisonhoarder Follow

{ID - pages from a pride zine based on Maisy, the cute little mouse character made by Lucy Collins. The title is, "Maisy gets a visit"
1 - Cover. Maisy is sitting down and holding a book, looking towards the sound of a doorbell ringing, 'Ding-dong!' Hanging in Maisy's window is a rainbow flag.
2 - Maisy greets their friend, Charley, a green crocodile, who smiles down at them.
'Today Maisy's friend Charley has come for a visit! Hello, Charley!'
2 - Charley goes into his bag, searching for something.
'Now what have you got there, Charley?'

3 - Charley presents a trans pride flag with a grin.
‘Ah! It’s a flag! Charley is very excited to show it to Maisy.’
4 - Maisy looks up curiously.
‘Maisy wants to know what Charley’s flag means.’
5 - A younger Charley dances in front of an ‘It’s a boy!’ sign as his parents look on in delight.
‘Well Maisy, at one point, everyone thought Charley was a girl, and it made Charley feel very strange. But then Charley realised he was a boy, and now he feels much better!’
6 - Maisy starts chattering excitedly, hands raised towards Charley.
‘What’s that? It seems Maisy wants to tell us something!’
7 - Maisy points to the white stripe of the flag, smiling brightly, and Charley smiles back.
8 - ‘Yes, that’s right, Maisy! Maisy says that some people don’t feel quite like a boy or a girl, and Maisy is one of those people. Good job, Maisy! It can be scary to be who you are, but your friends will always be there to help. Charley’s flag means that you love being YOU! [heart]’

How one 31-year-old paid off $220,000 in student loans in 3 years

Emmie Martin
Mar. 8, 2017, 12:40 PM ▲ 105,941

Back home in Joliet, Illinois, Horton took a job as an operations manager at the nonprofit her mother runs. The salary was comparable to what she made in DC, but the cost of living was drastically less. She increased her student-loan payments, setting the lofty goal of paying them off entirely in a year.

Horton and her boyfriend tied the knot soon after the move. Horton's mother gave the couple a condo that she had purchased at an auction as a wedding gift. It became crucial in wiping away the hefty student-loan tab.

Horton and her husband lived in the condo for three months, but then they decided to move in with her grandparents down the street and started renting out the condo to bring in extra income.

To anyone who feels overwhelmed by the prospect of taking on student loans — or paying back any debt they've incurred — Horton has a simple message: "I just want them to feel empowered that they can pay if off. If I can do it, anybody can."

the funniest parts of midnight sun with spoilers obviously

- when Edward first smells Bella it takes him two pages of inner monologue before he thinks of holding his breath
- apparently vampires can run so fast they don't leave footprints in snow just like LotR elves and this is physics nonsense
- Edward listening to a CD of "violent music"
- "a word I'd never said before in the presence of a lady" ajlskdflj
- Alice to Jasper: "I know you love me. Thanks."
- "And then my conscience smote me."
- "She was offended by my teasing. I must have done it wrong again."
- the "dazzling" moments from the original book are Edward fruitlessly trying to frighten people by baring his teeth I can't deal
- when Bella points this out he thinks "I'm losing my edge"
- Edward worries about whether Bella thinks he's pretty
- Bella wears a shirt "cut low enough to reveal her collarbones"
- Edward literally thinks the sparkling will horrify and disgust her
- "I avoided the word 'sex' because she did" OH GROW UP
- "It was enlightening and alluring to watch her in her element" IS THE INTRODUCTION TO A PARAGRAPH OF HER MAKING CHEERIOS
- the book. includes. a car chase.
- during the car chase they knock off the side mirrors and

EMMETT AND JASPER LOOK OUT THE WINDOWS SO EDWARD CAN READ THEIR MINDS AS REPLACEMENT SIDE MIRRORS this isn't stated in the book but I like to imagine they stuck their heads all the way out like happy dogs

Edward: Ever have pets?

Bella: Haha well my mom spent my life lying to me about being allergic but I finally figured out she didn't want any responsibility that kept her from doing whatever she wanted at the drop of a hat. Kinda like me, her mistake that weighed her down like an anchor, crushing her dreams and ruining her life. Anyway, you know how it is, you ruin your mother's life by being born so you devote yourself to catering to her hand and foot to make up for your existence. Also I hate birthdays because despite calling my mom my best friend she knows nothing about me and birthdays were about her ignoring my wishes and me having to pretend to like gifts she gave me that I clearly would not like. But it's ok, it's not like I'm going to be going back to visit ever, there's no room in that three bedroom house for me to sleep because both guest bedrooms were taken over by her hobbies. Anyway, how long is this hike?

It costs you literally nothing to leave service dogs the fuck alone.

yall. this isn't a joke. if i can tell a 5 yr old "my dog is working, please let her be" and they understand then you can too. those dogs ARE working. they have a job to do. and when we say 'leave them alone' that includes making faces at them and baby talking them. literally act like they are just someone's bag or something. if you distract them they could fail to alert their owner to a seizure or blood sugar issue or allergen. you are literally jeopardizing someone's life bc you can't have basic decency, respect, and self control.

Y'all literally do not care how many disabled people you kill and how many disabled lives you ruin - you want to coo at and pet the cute dog.

Go fuck yourself asshole.

princecharmingtobe Follow

Here, if you want a comparison that isn't an object: I worked as a caregiver for people with developmental (usually accompanied by physical) disabilities. My job was to accompany them into the community for various activities including shopping, dining, and leisure activities. And everywhere we went people would come up to ME and tell me what a good person I was, what a great service I was providing, god bless me, etc.
Not only was it embarrassing for both me and my consumers, it was distracting! I was supposed to be paying attention to my consumers and their needs, which could often change rapidly depending on their conditions, and instead I was having to deal with some prick who felt the need to voice what a martyr I was for doing my job. And they'd usually get angry if I ignored them or informed them they were distracting me from my job, which sounds familiar.

So yeah. Leave. The Dog. Alone. All you're doing is making yourself feel good while distracting the dog from its job and endangering the person it's supposed to be helping.

doodle333 Follow

Question: I know service dogs are for a variety of maladies (I hope that's not offensive, if so plz correct me) so is it wrong to even go up to the person and calmly tell them their dog is cute and ask them to give them a pet for me later when they're off the clock? Without actually giving the dog attention?

phoenixonwheels Follow

What exactly is it about "Ignore the dog. Do not mention the dog." that y'all aren't grasping.

Oh right. It's not what you want to do so you're just going to keep trying to weasel your way around it. Because fuck disabled people, it's a cute dog.

scarlet-rosepetals Follow

What's really getting me is that all of these "but what if I" examples blatantly involve inserting yourself into a disabled person's life just to get to their dog. Like

I just left my husband alone with our two children for sixteen days. I was not worried about anything regarding the house, their food, or their wellbeing. I put all the appointments in the family calendar and my husband checked it and kept them. I literally did not worry about them. I missed them, and I was sad that they missed me, but I didn't worry about them AT ALL. I need to impress upon you all that I missed their company, but was not worried for their welfare.

I also did no meal prep. I don't even think I went shopping right before I left.

This is not about apples and oranges. This isn't even about my husband. This is about the fact that this is apparently WEIRD.

Another mum at my daughter's school is leaving for ten days. She's taking her youngest (who is a very small baby) and leaving her husband with their two girls. She has been cooking for days preparing freezer meals. She's panicking and deputizing her six year old to remind him how to make school lunches. AND I AM APPALLED.

A) He is definitely not helpless. (He's a doctor or something.) What gendered bullshit. B) THAT LITTLE GIRL IS NOT OLD ENOUGH TO BE RESPONSIBLE FOR HER AND HER SISTER'S WELLBEING. WHAT THE ACTUAL FUCK. C) Why is she married to this person and creating children with him if he's this big of an idiot?

While she was laughingly recounting this, the other mums were nodding and smiling sympathetically, like oh yes, I too have my caveman at home!! Such managing required! I was the only one who was like "Dude, he'll be fine. Literally. He will be fine." I said it a lot. She was not convinced. She kept bringing up her older daughter. She'll be like a little mum!

NO.

NO NO NO NO.

NO.

Straight women, don't do this shit. It's gross. Don't infantilize your husbands and then expect your daughters to pick up the slack. So fucking gross. So. So. GROSS.

The fact that so many adults think a six year old girl is more capable of learning and performing basic domestic tasks than a grown-ass man says it all, really.

This stuff is so toxic and awful. I told a car full of women one time that I refused to be in another relationship until I met a man who was capable of making his own doctors' appointments and washing the dishes. They told me I was going to die alone.

Fuck this shit. Don't enable men's incompetence and label it cute.

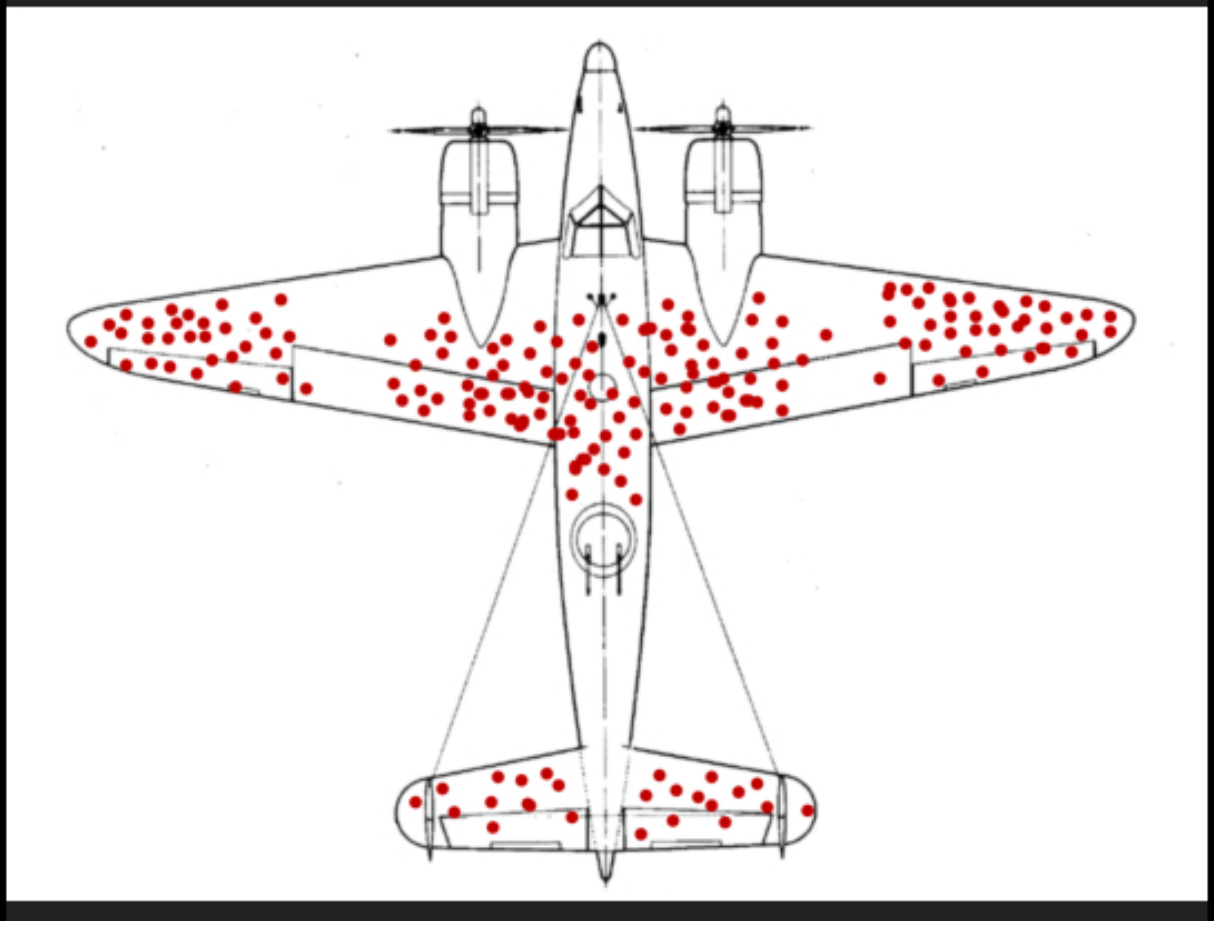
This is a picture tracking bullet holes on Allied planes that encountered Nazi anti-aircraft fire in WW2.



At first, the military wanted to reinforce those areas, because obviously that's where the ground crews observed the most damage on returning planes. Until Hungarian-born Jewish mathematician Abraham Wald pointed out that this was the damage on the planes that made it home, and the Allies should armor the areas where there are no dots at all, because those are the places where the planes won't survive when hit. This phenomenon is called survivorship bias, a logic error where you focus on things that survived when you should really be looking at things that didn't.

We have higher rates of mental illness now? Maybe that's because we've stopped killing people for being "possessed" or "witches." Higher rate of allergies? Anaphylaxis kills, and does so really fast if you don't know what's happening. Higher claims of rape? Maybe victims are less afraid of coming forward. These problems were all happening before, but now we've reinforced the medical and social structures needed to help these people survive. And we still have a long way to go.

This is one of my favorite anecdotes to show how clever rewording of statistics can make them say the opposite of what they mean:

Every time a state makes riding a motorcycle without a helmet illegal, the number of ER patients seriously injured in motorcycle accidents skyrockets. Every single time.

When you phrase it just right, it makes it sound like it's more dangerous to ride a motorcycle with a helmet than without one. Of course, the reality is that before those laws, those patients were going to the morgue, not the ER.

Man Strolling with a Boy Carrying Flowering Branch, Kitagawa Fujimaro, c. 1810, Cleveland Museum of Art: Japanese Art

A young man strolls in front of a boy carrying flowering plum branches, perhaps symbolic of spring. The colors and patterns in the boy's clothing, along with the plum branches at the edge of the painting, introduce an element of movement and surprise. This image is similar to the composition of Courtesans and Attendants by Engetsudo (see 1985.255). The poem inscribed at the top reads: The full blooming cherry is not the only flower worth mentioning. The color of the young plum tree blooms as well. The Japanese word for color, iro, is a double entendre for love or sex. The full blooming cherry refers to the mature female courtesans of the Yoshiwara district of Edo (Tokyo), while the young plum refers to handsome young men, who the poet suggests one not overlook in the pursuit of pleasure. Kitagawa Fujimaro was a disciple of renowned painter and print designer Kitagawa Utamaro (1753?–1806).
Size: Overall: 180.4 × 48.3 cm (71 × 19 in.); Painting only: 94 × 31 cm (37 × 12 3/16 in.)
Medium: hanging scroll; ink and color on silk

I don't think anyone talks about the specific trauma of growing up autistic and not being able to read social signals tbh - at least it's not something I've seen talked about.

It's talked about sometimes in the context of abuse trauma that people who have it feel like they're walking on eggshells because they grew up with unpredictable people who could go off at any moment(and I'm in this group as well), but what has to be understood is that for many autistic people, the entire world is like that. All people are unpredictable to us - we can't read social cues. It's not just a matter of being awkward, we can't do it. We have no way of reading the signs that someone's getting annoyed, or wants us to leave, or is "just being polite", so as kids, we push and push past every signal because we can't see them, and then, seemingly out of the blue, we're getting snapped/shouted at and we have no way of understanding why or how to avoid it next time.

It's traumatic, and it stays with you - there's a reason some autistic people tend to be shy and withdrawn, or develop social anxiety. We learn at a very early age that everyone is unpredictable and could snap at any moment, and we don't know how to feel it out at all, so eventually, it becomes safer just to not interact at all. We can't see the boundaries, and we don't want to get our hearts broken, so we pull back, we don't message first, we wait for others to make the first move, we follow, we copy, we mask, but we never assume. And that weight carries into adulthood - it carries to friendships, romantic relationships, professional relationships, and every other form of interaction we have. Those times we've been startled by anger or caught off guard by irritation stick so deep in us and it's not just something you shake off and forget.

Allythegreat1 on AO3 left this as a comment: "Can you please write me a gift where Agnarr realizes he's smitten with Iduna and leaves her flowers on her nightstand in her castle guest room?"

GIF by hafanforever

The crocus meant Arendelle, a purple one meant the King in particular. If the Greeks were to be believed, it was Krokus, turned into a flower for all eternity, the end result of an unhappy love affair.

But Agnarr did not want that for his fate, for theirs. So he added red tulips for love and honeysuckle for its sweet smell in the clutch of flowers he took from the hot house.

These same flowers might bloom as early as March if he waited to gather them from the hills but Iduna was here now, in the castle, making a guest room her own, and he would welcome her with a show of affection she would not be able to understand yet, but by spring, she would.

I notice there's a thriving "moss terrarium" market on the internet but I take one look at their photos and I can tell almost all of them just grabbed a bunch of moss from outside, photographed in a jar and put it up for sale the same day.

I'm not singling anybody out here, this is just the first photo I grabbed that demonstrates what I'm talking about: most of the things you see here are doomed to rot. The cool lichens in the foreground absolutely cannot live in perpetual moisture and still air. The other mosses are also probably species that will turn into gross brown slime if they can't enjoy distinct seasons in the open. Furthermore if any of these things had been growing in a bowl, they would probably be pointing in the same direction (towards the lamp or window they'd been under) and have whispier, longer shapes.

Some youtubers like serpadesigns are serious about this stuff and have good advice. Personally if I were using my etsy to sell "moss terrariums" I would absolutely not sell one that hadn't already been growing and proving itself well-established for at least months. I have so many that have been growing steadily for up to a year now. More than I even have room for! IF ONLY there was something I could do with them all!!!!

(Do I dare undermine etsy's moss-murder ring?)
